

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

A MAP OF EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

The adjoining Map gives a local view of the chief European families of languages and their dialects. Those spoken by the Japhetic race are noticed in the Table, Part I. § 19; but a short abstract of the Map may be useful. Beginning then on the west, we have the following families of languages and their dialects.

1. The Celtic Dialects to the west include the Gaelic or Highland Scotch, spoken in the Highlands; the Erse or Irish, in Ireland; the Manks in the Isle of Man; the Welsh in Wales; Cornish in Cornwall; and the Armorican in Britany.

2. The Latin Dialects are to the south. From their supposed Grecian origin, the Latin dialects are also sometimes designated Græco-Latin; the former appellation is here preferred, as most of the languages included in this division are evidently formed directly from the Latin. In the Latin or Græco-Latin are comprehended the Portuguese, Spanish, French, Italian, and modern Greek, spoken in their respective countries.

3. The Germanic Dialects are in the middle. This family of languages is divided into Low and High German. The Low-German comprehends the English with its parent, the Anglo-Saxon, gradually introduced into Britain by the Jutes, Saxons, and Angles

JUTES.*

8. Mercia in Derbyshire, &c. . . . . 586

The other Low-German Languages were the Dutch, with the dialects of Flanders, Gelderland, Overysel, and Friesland, the language of Westphalia, Honover, Holstein, Sleswick, South Jutland, Mecklenburg, Magdeburg, Brandenburg, Pomerania, Prussia, Courland, Livonia, Estonia. The High-German in the south or hilly part of Germany, including the High-Saxon, Hessian, Thuringian, Francic (in Franconia), Rhinish, Alsacian, Bavarian, Silesian, Transilvanian, Suavian, Alemanic, Austrian, Tirolese, Swiss, and Moeso-Gothic.

4. The Scandinavian Dialects in the north, comprehend the Icelandic formed from the Old Danish (Danska túnga); the modern Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Greenlandish, Ferroe, Shetlandish, and Orkneyan, spoken in their respective countries and islands.

5. The Sclavonic or Slavic Dialects in the north-west, are the Russian, Servian, Croatian, Polish, Bohemian, &c., Lettish or Lithuanian, dialects of Wilna, Samogitia, &c.

6. Some consider the Sclavonic to be quite distinct from the Finnish, Laplandic, Siberian, Ostiakian, Hungarian or Magyarian, Twastian, and Carelian. The earliest station in which they have been found is between the Caucasian and the Oural mountains.§

7. Some European and other languages cannot be easily classed with the Sanscrit. The Basque is a remnant of the Old Iberian or Spanish, now spoken in Biscay and Navarre in Spain, and Lower Navarre, Labour, and Soule in France. The Basque seems to be a primitive language, but still to have some affinity with the Shemitic family.|| Turkish is of Tartar origin, and allied to the Shemitic.¶

It ought to be observed, that as one dialect often gradually melts into another, it is impossible to mark with precision where one terminates and another begins. So great has been the difficulty and uncertainty in delineating the extent of dialects, that several times the attempt was almost relinquished. Though conscious of exposure to severe criticism, the plan has been carried into effect, only from the conviction that many will be glad to obtain, by a mere glance of the eye, that information which it has cost much laborious research to delineate on so small a map even in this imperfect manner.

1.—THE IMPORTANCE OF A CLOSE INVESTIGATION OF LANGUAGES IN CORROBORATING REVELATION, AND TRACING THE ORIGIN AND AFFINITY OF NATIONS.—ALL LANGUAGES HAVE A DISTANT VERBAL RESEMBLANCE, INDICATING A PRIMITIVE CONNEXION.—THERE IS ALSO A GREAT DIVERSITY IN THE FORM AND STRUCTURE OF LANGUAGES, WHICH IS MOST RATIONALLY ACCOUNTED FOR BY THE CONFUSION RECORDED BY MOSES.—LANGUAGES ARE DIVIDED INTO CLASSES, SUCH AS THOSE SPOKEN BY THE DESCENDANTS OF SHEM, HAM, AND JAPHETH.—THE PEOPLE AND LANGUAGES OF EUROPE WERE OF JAPHETIC ORIGIN.—THE FIRST TRIBES THAT ENTERED EUROPE WERE CELTS,—THE NEXT WERE THE TEUTONI OR GERMANS, — AND THE THIRD THE SCLAVONIANS.—AS WE ARE MOST CONCERNED WITH THE TEUTONIC, OR GERMAN TRIBES, THEY CLAIM A PARTICULAR NOTICE.

1. It is mind, understanding, or the power of reasoning, which is the distinguishing property of man. The mind is a man's self; by it we are allied to the highest intelligence. Can it then be unimportant for an intellectual being to examine the operations of the mind? But its operations or thoughts are so quick and fugitive, that no real apprehension of them can be obtained, except by their representatives, that is, by words. These, when spoken, quickly vanish from the mind. It is only when words are written, that they become tangible; they are then the lasting representatives or signs of ideas. Those, therefore, who philosophically and effectually examine the structure and the right meaning of words, the instruments of thought, are most likely to have the clearest apprehension of the mental powers and their operations.

2. Words, as the instruments for expressing thoughts,* are the constituent parts of language. It is by language that the feelings, experience, and indeed the whole mind of individuals, can be communicated and made the property of our whole species. The most sublime thoughts and extensive knowledge of those who have been favoured with the highest order of intellect, are in their writings concentrated and perpetuated: thus the exalted endowment of reason is perfected by the gift of rational language.

3. The minute investigation of language is not only important in examining the mental powers, but in bearing its testimony to the truth of Revelation, and in tracing the origin and affinity of nations.

4. The physical history of man, the researches of the most eminent geologists, the investigations of the most able philosophers, and the close and patient examination of all the phenomena of nature, are so many distinct confirmations of the Mosaic record. At present we need only refer to the physical or natural history of man.* Here every candid inquirer is led to the conclusion, that all the diversities of the human race originally sprang from one father and mother; and hence we reasonably infer, that this primitive pair had one primitive language. We now find a great diversity of tongues. To account for this diversity, philosophers have started different theories:† but there is no theory which so satisfactorily accounts for the variety of languages, and yet the similarity observable in their fragments, as the plain statement of facts recorded by Moses.

5. "The whole earth was of one language and one speech," or of one lip,‡ and of like words.§ "And it came to pass, as they (the families of the sons of Noah) journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there." Because the people said, "Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth," when the Lord had determined that they should be dispersed, and thus "replenish the earth," God "confounded their lip, language, or pronunciation, that they could not understand one another's speech." "Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth; and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth." (Gen. xi. 1, 2, 4, 7, 9.)

6. On a close examination and analysis of languages, even as we find them at the present day, nearly forty-two centuries after the confusion, * Researches into the Physical History of Mankind, by C. J. Prichard, M.D., F.R.S., &c.

† Some French naturalists and physiologists, with a few writers on history and antiquities in Germany, speak of the Adamic race as of one among many distinct creations. Von Humboldt speaks of the Americans as a distinct stock. Malte Brun has taken it for granted that each part of the earth had its own race, of whose origin it was in vain to inquire. Niebuhr is of the same opinion as to the early inhabitants of Italy.—Dr. Prichard's Eastern Origin of the Celtic Nations, 8vo. Oxford, 1831.

§ Heb. וּדְבָרִים אֶחָדִים: Septuagint καὶ φωνὴ μία πᾶσι: Vulgate et sermonum eorundem.—אֶחָדִים pl. ones, alike, the same, from אֶחָד one; Arab. اِحدان pl. ones, from اِحد one.—דְּבָרִים words, speech, from דָּבַר a word, matter, thing; verbum, res, aliquid.

there are, in almost every tongue, a few fragments and whole words so similar, as to indicate an original connexion. The great diversity in their vocabularies and grammatical structure is still more apparent. The facts recorded by the Hebrew legislator of one original language, the subsequent confusion of lip or pronunciation, and the consequent dispersion, alone account for this pervading identity or resemblance, and the striking diversity.* Both these claim a brief notice.

7. First, there are resemblances or identities still observable in the severed fragments of an original language. These occur most frequently in words of the commonest use. Such words, if not composed exactly of the same letters, are from letters of the same organ, or from those which are interchangeable.

8. A slight inspection of the ten numerals, even in a few languages, will prove that they had an original connexion.

* Those who wish to see this subject fully and satisfactorily discussed, are referred to the admirable papers of Sharon Turner, Esq., F.S.A. On the Affinities and Diversities in the Languages of the World, and on their Primeval Cause, in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature of the United Kingdom, Vol. I. Part I. 4to. 1827. p. 17—106, and Vol. II. Part II. 1834, p. 252—262. He has arranged the words used to denote Father in more than five hundred languages. He has also made a similar classification of the various terms to designate Mother, as well as the first two numerals. Mr. Turner observes: "In my letters on the first and second numerals, it was endeavoured to show, that the words which various nations have used to express them, were either simple sounds of one syllable, or compound terms resolvable frequently into these simpler elements, and most probably always made from them; but a more important object was to evince, that both the elementary and the composite sounds have resemblances and connected analogies, which, although used by nations that were strangers to each other, were too numerous to have been accidental."

I intimated that the languages or people, among whom such similarities prevailed, however disparted and divergent they had been, or now were, must have had some ancient and primeval consanguinity.—In meditating on this subject, it occurred to me, that if the mind were not pursuing an illusory idea, the same facts and the same intimation would appear as strikingly in some other words, as they were visible in the numerals. This impression, and the desire neither to mislead, nor to be misled, have induced me to observe, whether the words that are used in the different languages of the world to express the first, the dearest, the most universal, and the most lasting relations of life, Father and Mother, would be found to confirm, or overthrow the principles suggested. The words were arranged into classes, according to their primitive or more simple elements. These classes demonstrate that the common use of sounds to express the same ideas, must have had some common origin, and are evidences of a common and early affinity. While each class proves a similarity or an identity, the numerous classes indicate great diversity. Identity without diversity would have proved only a common derivation, and diversity without identities would disprove community of origin. But so much partial identity and resemblance remaining, at this advanced period of the world, visible amid so much striking and general disparity, exactly coincides with the Hebrew statement of an anterior unity, and of a subsequent confusion, abruption, and dispersion.

Amongst his deductions Mr. Turner observes, that the "primeval language has not been anywhere preserved, but that fragments of it must, from the common origin of all, everywhere exist; that these fragments will indicate the original derivation and kindredship of all; and that some direct causation of no common agency has operated to begin, and has so permanently affected mankind, as to produce a striking and universally experienced diversity." A gentleman, whose erudition is universally acknowledged, and whose opinions, from his extensive lingual knowledge, and especially from his critical acquaintance with the oriental tongues, deserve the greatest attention, has come to this conclusion; for he has stated ("De oorspronkelijke taal, wier oudste dochter het Sanskrit is, de vruchtbare moeder van zoovele dialekten, bestaat niet meer,") the original language, of which the oldest daughter is the Sanscrit, the fruitful mother of so many dialects, exists no longer.—Professor Hamaker's Akademische voorlezingen, &c. Leyden, 8vo. 1835, p. 7. These interesting lectures have just appeared; English and German translations of them are preparing for the press. Ere long we hope to see Professor Hamaker's two other learned works: A Comparison of the Radical Words of the Sanscrit with those of other Dialects; and, Grammatical Remarks on the Indo-Germanic Languages—on both of which he has for some time been diligently, and it may be added, very successfully engaged.

9. By the common change of t into d, all the words in the different languages denoting two and three, are evidently cognate, or from one common source. The Sans. chaṭur; Erse keathair; Pers. chehaur; Rus. chetyre; Grk. τετταρες, πισυρες; Wel. pedwar; Lat. quatuor; Oscan petor; Moes. fidwor; Old High Ger. fiuuar; A.-S. feower; Dut. vier; Dan. fire; Eng. four, by the change of ch, k, q, τ, π, p, and f, have a distant connexion.* By a slight change of lip or pronunciation, the other numerals appear to be cognate.

10. The Heb. שש sēs six, seems to be allied to the Sans. shash; the Chaldee תליתי tliti third, to the Sans. tritaya. Other words have evidently a connexion: the Heb. בית bit a house, dwelling; Chaldee בות but to tarry, dwell, often used in the Targum for לון lun; in Arab. بات bat or بيت beit to tarry, be situated; the Erse beith; Wel. bȳdh, bōd; Teutonic be, beon to be; and the Sans. verbal root भू bhū, whence bhavami I am, are allied.—The Heb. עי is; Wel. oes he is; Erse is, as is me I am, seems connected with the Sans. verbal root अस् as, whence we have Sans. asmi, asi, asti sum, es, est; Grk. εἰμι [ἐσμι] εἶσαι, ἐσσι. †

* See the change of letters admirably proved in the erudite and invaluable work of Dr. Prichard, On the Eastern Origin of the Celtic Nations, p. 27—91, 8vo. Oxford, 1831, to whose work the preceding table is much indebted. The regular interchange of consonants, and the laws that influence the vowel system, are also satisfactorily proved and fully treated by Dr. James Grimm in his Deutsche Grammatik, Gottingen, 1822, 8vo. Vol. I. p. 581, 584, 578; and in Professor Schmitthenner's valuable Introduction to his short German Dictionary. No one who has omitted to examine what these learned and laborious authors have written, ought to reject, and much less ridicule, the systematic and regular change of vowels and consonants.

12. The table of numerals, with the preceding short collection of examples, may be sufficient to show that there are many words which are of cognate origin, even in languages often deemed the most dissimilar. It is not contended with the ancient fathers that the Hebrew is the primitive tongue, or with the modern philosophers that it is the Sanscrit; for it appears, on the evidence of Moses,* and from the conclusion of eminent philologists, that the original language of our first parents no longer exists. The similarity of the words previously cited, prove that these languages originally proceeded from one common source, and they thus verify that part of the Mosaic history which declares, that “the whole earth was of one language.”

13. It is now necessary to advert to the vast diversity of languages, which is satisfactorily accounted for by the confusion of lip or pronunciation. Those who pronounced their words in the same manner, separating from those they could not understand, would naturally unite together, and form distinct tribes. In addition to the passages previously cited relative to the dispersion, Moses adds: “By these (the sons of Japheth) were the isles of the Gentiles (Europe) divided in their lands, every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations.—These are the sons of Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.—These are the sons of Shem, after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations.” (Gen. x. 5, 20, 31.)

14. Do they, who reject these and the preceding passages of the Sacred History, on account of their reference to a supernatural agency, suggest that various languages existed from the beginning, and that the faculty of expressing ideas by a different language was given to distinct creations of men in each particular region of the earth? This would imply, “that the world contained from the beginning, not three or four, as some writers are willing to believe, but some hundreds, and perhaps thousands of different human races.”† These numerous creations must refer to a supernatural agency as many times more miraculous than the event recorded by Moses, as the miracle, according to their theory, was numerically repeated.

15. Whatever diversity of opinion there may have been, as to the origin of the great variety of tongues, the most eminent philologists have generally divided languages into classes, distinguished by remarkable differences in their grammatical structure and vocabularies.

16. One of these classes of languages is the Shemitic, or Semetic, so called from the supposition that the race of Shem alone spoke the language so denominated. Objections may be made to the term, as the * Gen. xi. 1, 6, 7, 9; and Gen. x. 5, 20, 31. See § 6, note †.

† The languages of the African nations, according to Seetzen, who has made the most extensive and original researches into this subject, amount to 100 or 150. In America, there are said to be 1500 idioms, “notabilmente diversi.” Such was the opinion of Lopez, a missionary of great knowledge in the languages both of South and North America. See Seetzen’s Letters in, Von Zach’s Monathliche Correspondenz, 1810, p. 328; Hervas’s Catalogo delle Lingue, p. 11; and Dr. Prichard’s Celtic Nations, p. 11.

Phoenicians or Canaanites, who took their origin from Ham, spoke a Shemitic dialect; but as Shemitic is in general use and well understood, it is best to retain it. The race of Shem, who were much devoted to a pastoral life, spread over the finest part of Middle and Upper Asia, over Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria. The following languages, distinguished by being written from right to left, and forming their grammatical connexions by prefixes and postfixes, are of the Shemitic race:—

Shemitic Languages.

Hebrew, { Chaldee, { Syriac, Arabic,
          Aramæan, &c.

17. The descendants of Ham were seafaring men, who founded the republics of Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, &c. Little appears to be known of the languages used by the race of Ham. Some name the following:—

The Dialect of Ancient Egypt.

Coptic, { Sahidic, { Bashmuric,

The numerous African dialects spoken by the Kabyles of Mauritania, the Tuarik of the Great Desert, the Felatahs of Nigritia, the Foulahs of the Senegal, &c.

18. Another class of idioms is the Japhetic, by some called Caucasian, from the supposition that the primitive seat of this race was near Mount Caucasus; by others denominated Indo-Germanic, indicating that all the Germanic tongues had an Indian origin. The compound Indo-Germanic, by not including the Celtic or Welsh, an important branch of these idioms, has been considered defective. A word of more extended signification has been adopted, namely, Indo-European,* to denote all those European languages which are clearly cognate with the Sanscrit, or ancient language of India. Other etymologists have proposed Arian or Persian, as it designates their origin amongst the Arians, Irenians, or Persians.† As some Asiatic as well as European dialects ought to be included in the name, it may be better to retain the old term Japhetic, comprising all the supposed descendants of Japheth, who diverged from Shinar throughout Asia and Europe; from the banks of the Ganges to the Atlantic ocean, and from the shores of Iceland to the Mediterranean Sea. They seem to have passed to the north of the great range of the Taurus, as far as the Eastern ocean, and probably passed over Behring's straits from Kamschatka to America.‡

A singular congruity is said to exist in all the American languages, from the north to the southern extremity of the continent. They may be reduced to a few great divisions, several of which extend as radii from a common centre in the north western part near Behring's straits.—Dr. Prichard's Eastern Origin of the Celtic Nations, p. 6.

The Dictionary is full of important matter relative to the early customs in Scotland and England; it displays throughout great learning and critical acumen in tracing the etymology of words. In the Dissertation, he adduces every argument and authority which can be produced to prove that the Scotch were of Scandinavian origin.

20. Little need be said here of the Asiatic nations proceeding from Japhet: a casual remark, however, may be admitted upon the language of the Hindoos. The Sanscrit* is that ancient tongue which once prevailed throughout all Hindoostan, from the Gulf of Bengal to the Arabian Sea, and from the southern extremity of the country to the Himalaya Mountains on the north. The Sanscrit is the most compositive, flexible, and complete language yet known. It admits of being perfectly analysed, by merely reducing its compound words to simple elements which exist in the language itself. It contains the roots of the various European dialects, of the Latin, Greek, Celtic, German, and Slavonic. Having all its words composed of its own elements, and containing no exotic terms, proves it to be very near its primitive state.† The Sanscrit is, therefore, placed at the commencement of the languages here called Japhetic. That all these are closely connected with the Sanscrit, will clearly appear from a few examples.

21. The preceding remarks are by no means intended to serve as a complete classification of languages; they only afford a very superficial view, for the monosyllabic, or the Chinese, Indo-Chinese, &c. are entirely omitted. What is advanced relative to the inhabitants and languages of Europe must be more precise.

22. Europe appears to have been gradually occupied by successive waves of population from the east. Those now located most to the west, the Celts, were amongst the tribes who first left Asia, and were impelled westward by succeeding emigrations, and thus spread over a considerable part of Europe. The Celts, or Celtæ, were a people of Gaul, who, at a very early period, crossed the straits of Dover, and entered the British Isles. The ancient Britons were therefore Celts, who were subsequently conquered by the Romans, and then by the Saxons, and driven into Wales and Cornwall. Britain must have been inhabited even before the Trojan war, more than 1200 years before the Christian era, as tin was then brought from Britain by the Phœnicians.† It has been clearly proved that the Celtic dialects are of cognate origin with the Sanscrit, though differing so much in structure as to be distinct from the Teutonic or German.‡

23. The Teutonic, German, or Gothic tribes, were the second source of European population. Like their predecessors, the Celts, these tribes came out of Asia into Europe over the Kimmerian Bosphorus, between the Black Sea and the Sea of Azoph, but at a later period, perhaps about B.C. 680. In the time of Herodotus, about B.C. 450, the Teutonic tribes were on the Danube, and extended towards the south. Fifty years before the Christian era, in Cæsar's time, they were called Teutoni or Germans, and had established themselves so far to the westward as to have obliged the Celts to withdraw from the eastern banks of the Rhine. In later ages they became known by the name of Getæ or Goths.

24. The third and most recent stream of population which flowed into Europe, conveyed thither the Sclavonian or Sarmatian nations:

* See numerous instances in Dr. Prichard's Celtic Nations, p. 66—69.

they are mentioned by Herodotus as being on the borders of Europe in his time ; they therefore probably entered Europe soon after 450. These coming last, occupied the most eastern parts, as Russia, Poland, Eastern Prussia, Moravia, Bohemia, and their vicinity. From these Slavonic tribes a third genus of European languages arose, as the Russian, Polish, Bohemian, Livonian, Lusatian, Moravian, Dalmatian, &c.

25. As the tribes of Celtic origin, the first source of European population, are clearly distinguished from the Teutonic or German, and as the Slavonic or Sarmatian tribes, the third wave of population, have never extended so far west as England, nor made any settlement among us, no further notice will be taken of them or of their languages. We are most concerned with the Teutonic, German, or Gothic, the second stream of European population, and the language spoken by these tribes. The language, brought into Europe by the great Gothic family, is chiefly known to us in its two important branches, the GERMANIC and SCANDINAVIAN. The Scandinavian branch includes the Icelandic, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, &c. The Teutonic or Germanic branch is subdivided into Low-German and High-German. The Low-German comprises not only the older languages, such as the Anglo-Saxon, Friesic, and the Old-Saxon, but their immediate descendants, the modern English, with all its provincial dialects, the Dutch or Netherlandish, Flemish, and the present Low or Platt German dialects, spoken in the north or low and flat parts of Germany. The High-German includes an account of the Mœso-Gothic, Alemannic, and Francic, with the present High-German, and its modern dialects.

II.—GERMANIC AND SCANDINAVIAN LANGUAGES.

1. The Germanic or Teutonic languages, the Anglo-Saxon, Friesic, Old-Saxon, Mœso-Gothic, Alemannic, and Francic, are easily distinguished from the Scandinavian tongues, the Icelandic, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish. The Germanic languages have no passive voice, and have only one definite article, which is always placed before the noun or adjective ; but the Scandinavians have now, and have had from the earliest times, a passive form of the verb, and two definite articles—one placed before nouns, and the other affixed to them.

*The Germans, Teutoni,* Teutschen, Deutschen, speaking the German, Teutonic or Theotisc language.*

2. Each of the Teutonic tribes skirting the northern or north-eastern boundary of the Roman empire, had its own distinctive denomination. Their peculiar names were unknown or disregarded by the Romans; hence these hostile bands of the Teutoni, from their martial appearance, were classed together, and by the Gauls and Romans called Germani, or war-men.† We do not find in any remnant of their language, that the Germans ever applied this term to themselves.‡ When united as one people, under Charlemagne, the Germans styled themselves Teutschen or Deutschen, from the Teutoni§ mentioned by Cæsar and Livy.|| These Teutoni were so powerful and influential, that (B. C. 102) they, united with the Cimbri, entered Italy, which was only preserved by the bravery and talent of Marius. While at the present day the Germans most frequently apply to themselves the name of Deutschen, they are generally called Germans by foreigners.

3. Wherever the Germanic or Gothic tribes appeared, liberty prevailed: they thought, they acted for themselves. They would not blindly follow any leader or any system: they were free. Hence Theodoric encouraged Gothic literature, and induced Cassiodorus to write a history of the Goths from their only records, their ancient songs. Another Teutonic or Theotisc monarch, Charlemagne, gave encouragement to genius. He saw and felt, that the only effectual mode of giving a full establishment to his authority over those whom he had conquered, was by enlightening their understandings, and influencing them by the solemn sanctions of religion. These he wisely attempted to convey in the vernacular idiom, convinced that his subjects loved even the language of

The word German is Gallic, for the Gauls called the soldiers who received a stipend, Gaisaten [Plut. Marius, 6, 7]. If the French gais be the Moes. gais, Franc. ger a spear, then German would be a spear-man, spear-bearer.—Schmitthenner's Deutsches Wörterbuch sub voce, p. 102. freedom. He used his influence to preserve the songs of his native land, and to improve its language and fix its grammar. Thus stability was first given to the German tongue, from which period it has gradually advanced, till it has become one of the most cultivated and important languages in Europe. To trace its progress, it will be necessary to enter into detail, and to examine the German language in its two great divisions, the Low and High German.

Division into Low and High German.

4. The Germanic or Teutonic tribes may, according to the nature of their language, be separated into two divisions. The Low-German prevailed in the low or flat provinces of ancient Germany, lying to the north and west, and is used in modern Flanders, the Dutch provinces, Westphalia, Oldenburg, Hanover, Brunswick, Holstein, Sleswick, Mecklenburg, Prussia, Courland, and part of Livonia, where the Low-German, or Nieder or Platt-Deutsch is spoken. This dialect is more soft and flowing than the High-German. It changes the High-German sch into s; the harsh sz or z into t, and always delights in simple vowels.

5. The second division comprised the Upper or High German, which prevailed in the mountainous or southern parts of Germany, that is, in the north of Switzerland, in Alsace, Swabia, Baden, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, the Austrian States, Silesia, Upper Saxony, and Hesse. The High-German dialect is distinguished by its predilection for long vowels and diphthongs, and rough, hard, and aspirated consonants, especially by the harsh pronunciation of sch, st, sz, and z.

6. The Francic seems to occupy an intermediate state between the High and Low German; but as it appears most inclined to the High-German, it is placed in the second division. The earlier Franks inhabited the banks of the Rhine, from Mayence to Cleves, the present Rhine Provinces of Prussia, Wurzburg, Bamberg, and Franconia, now part of Bavaria, and they continually increased their territory till the immense empire of Charlemagne was founded.

Low-German.

7. The Low-German comprises—

1st. Anglo-Saxon, written by king Alfred, Ælfric, Cædmon, &c. sec. III. 9, note.

2nd. Friesic, the written remains of which are found in the Asega-buch, &c.

3rd. The Old-Saxon or Platt-Deutsch, which has employed the pens of many authors. Tatjan's Harmony of the Gospels is translated into a sort of Old-Saxon.—The Heliand is in Old-Saxon.—Reineke Vos, &c.

High-German.

8. To the High-German belong—

1st. The Mæso-Gothic, written by Ulphilas.

2nd. The Alemannic or Suabian, written by Kero, Rhabanus Maurus, Otfrid, Notker, Chunrad von Kirchberg, Gotfrit von Nifen.

3rd. The Francic, or transition between High and Low, but approaching more to the High-German, the chief writers in which are Isidore, and Willeram.

9 The nature and peculiarity of these six dialects may be best shown by a short historical detail of each tribe, as an alteration in a language was generally produced by some influential political change. It seems impossible to say which of the Germanic tongues was first used in Europe, but probably that language which was spoken by the people located most to the west. If this be sufficient for priority, the Anglo-Saxons will claim the first notice.

III.—THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

1. The Anglo-Saxons derived their being and name from the Angles, a tribe of the Saxon confederacy, occupying Anglen in the south-east part of the Duchy of Sleswich in the south of Denmark. These Saxons, like all the Teutoni or Germans, were of oriental origin. They were as far westward as the Elbe in the days of Ptolemy, A.D. 90; and therefore in all probability they were amongst the first Germanic or Teutonic tribes that visited Europe. Their situation, between the Elbe and the Eyder in the south of Denmark, seems to indicate that they moved among the foremost columns of the vast Teutonic emigration. The Saxons, when first settled on the Elbe, were an inconsiderable people, but in succeeding ages they increased in power and renown. About A.D. 240, the Saxons united with the Franks (the free people) to oppose the progress of the Romans towards the north. By this league and other means the Saxon influence was increased, till they possessed the vast extent of country embraced by the Elbe, the Sala, and the Rhine, in addition to their ancient territory from the Elbe to the Eyder. In this tract of country were several confederate nations, leagued together for mutual defence. Although the Saxon name became, on the continent, the appellation of this confederacy of nations, yet at first it only denoted a single state.

2. It may be satisfactory to have a brief and clear account of the Germanic tribes, the Jutes, Saxons, and Angles, who successively obtained settlements in Britain.

3. The Jutes gained the first possessions. Hengist and Horsa, two brothers from Jutland or the Cimbric Chersonesus in Denmark, arrived in three ceols or small ships at Ebbs-fleet on the Isle of Thanet in A.D. 449. These Jutes, for assisting the Britons against the Picts and Scots, had the Isle of Thanet assigned to them. They subsequently obtained possession of Kent, the Isle of Wight, and part of Hampshire.

4. The Saxons had a very extended territory. After many of them had migrated to Britain, the parent stock on the continent had the name of Old-Saxons.* The first Saxon kingdom† was established by Ella in A.D. 491, under the name of South-Saxons, or South-Sax, now Sussex. In 494, another powerful colony arrived under Cerdic, and being placed west of the other kingdoms, they were, on their full establishment in 519, called West-Saxons [West-Seaxe], in its fullest extent embracing the north part of Hampshire, Berks, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and part of Cornwall.—A third Saxon kingdom, in A.D. 527, was planted in Essex, Middlesex, and the south part of Hertfordshire, under the name of East-Saxons, East-Sax, or Essex.

5. The Angles (Engle), from Sleswich in the south of Denmark, about A.D. 527, settled themselves in East Anglia, containing Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and part of Bedfordshire.—Ida, in A.D. 547, began to establish himself in Bernicia, comprehending Northumberland, and the south of Scotland between the Tweed and the Firth of Forth.—About A.D. 559, Ella conquered Deira [Deoramægð] lying between the Humber and the Tweed, including the present counties of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire.—Mercia was formed into an independent state by Crida, about A.D. 586, and comprehended the counties of Chester, Derby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Leicester, Northampton, Rutland, Huntingdon, the north of Beds, and Hertford, Warwick, Bucks, Oxon, Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Stafford, and Salop. Thus, one Jute, three Saxon, and four Angle, altogether eight kingdoms, were established in Britain, by the year 586.*

6. The Angles emigrated so numerously as to leave Angle, their original district, destitute of inhabitants. Though the Friesians are not named as uniting in the first conquest of Britain, it is clear, from their locality, that many of them accompanied the other Teutonic tribes.† Those now settled in Britain were denominated Anglo-Saxons to show their origin; Anglo-Saxon denoting that the people so called were the Angles, a nation coming from the Saxon confederacy. In subsequent times, when the Angles had been alienated from the Saxon confederacy by settling in Britain, they denominated that part of this kingdom which they inhabited Engla-land, the land of the Angles, Angle's land, which was afterwards contracted into England.

7. From the entrance of the Saxons into Britain in A.D. 449, they opposed the Britons, till, on the full establishment of the Saxon power in A.D. 586, the Britons were driven into Wales. As soon as the Britons ceased to oppose their invaders the Saxon kingdoms began to contend with each other. The West-Saxons, with varying success, gradually increased in influence and territory from Cerdic their first leader in A.D. 494, till 827, when Egbert, king of Wessex, defeated or made tributary all the other Saxon kingdoms. Egbert, his son Ethelwulph, and his grandsons Ethelbald, Ethelbert, Ethelred, and Alfred the Great, had to contend with new and fierce opponents in the Northmen, or Danes. The most energetic and renowned of the West-Saxon kings was Alfred the Great. He drove the Northmen from his kingdom, and found leisure not only to encourage literature in others, but, with great success, to devote himself to literary pursuits, as much as the proper discharge of the public affairs of his kingdom would allow. He translated into Anglo-Saxon, Boethius, Orosius, and Bede, and thus gave a preeminence to the West-Saxon language, as well as to the West-Saxon kingdom. The West-Saxons retained the government of this island till 1016, when Canute, a Dane, became king of England. Canute and his two sons, Harold and Hardicanute, reigned twenty-six years. The Saxon line was restored in 1042, and continued till 1066, when Harold the Second was slain by William duke of Normandy, commonly called William the Conqueror. Thus the Anglo-Saxon dynasty terminated, after it had existed in England about six hundred years. The Saxon power ceased when William the Conqueror ascended the throne, but not the language; for Anglo-Saxon, after rejecting or changing many of its inflections, continued to be spoken by the old inhabitants till the time of Henry the Third, A.D. 1258. What was written after this period has generally so great a resemblance to our present language, that it may evidently be called English.

* Mr. Turner, in his Hist. of A.-S., b. iii. ch. 5, vol. i. p. 309, observes: "This state of Britain has been improperly denominated the Saxon heptarchy. When all the kingdoms were settled, they formed an octarchy. Ella, supporting his invasion in Sussex, like Hengist in Kent, made a Saxon duarchy before the year 500. When Cerdic erected the state of Wessex in 519, a triarchy appeared; East Anglia made it a tetrarchy; Essex a pentarchy. The success of Ida, after 547, having established a sovereignty of Angles in Bernicia, the island beheld an hexarchy. When the northern Ella penetrated, in 560, southward of the Tees, his kingdom of Deira produced an heptarchy. In 586, the Angles branching from Deira into the regions south of the Humber, the state of Mercia completed an Anglo-Saxon octarchy."

8. From the preceding short detail, it appears that the Jutes had small possessions in Kent and the Isle of Wight: the Angles occupied the east and north of England, with the south of Scotland: and the Saxons had extensive possessions in the western and southern parts. The descendants of these Saxons were very numerous: their power and influence became most extensive under the dominion of West-Saxon kings, especially under Egbert and Alfred. It was the powerful mind of Alfred that drew into England the talent and literature of Europe, and induced him to benefit his country by writing so much in his native tongue, the Anglo-Saxon; thus giving the West-Saxon dialect so great a predominance as to constitute it the cultivated language of the Anglo-Saxons. This pure Anglo-Saxon may be found in the works of Alfred, Ælfric, the Anglo-Saxon Laws, Cædmon, &c.

9. Ethelbert, king of Kent, being converted to the Christian faith by the preaching of Augustine, in A.D. 597, was distinguished as the author of the first written Saxon laws which have descended to us, or are known to have been established. Some think that the laws of Ethelbert are the first Anglo-Saxon composition:* others give priority to Beowulf, the Traveller's Song, &c. Beowulf is said to have been nearly contemporary with Hengist;† but the poem contained in the Cotton MS. British Museum, Vitellius, A. xv. is not so old. There occur in it Christian allusions which fix this text at least at a period subsequent to A.D. 597. Some eminent scholars attribute this MS. to the early part of the 10th century.‡

From this fine poem may be selected some early specimens of pure Anglo-Saxon. The Traveller's Song, in its original composition, is referred by Mr. Conybeare* to about A.D. 450. It was first printed by him with a literal Latin version, and a free poetical translation in English. An improved Saxon text is given in Mr. Kemble's Beowulf, p. 223—233. For an example of an early specimen of Anglo-Saxon poetry, compared with one of a subsequent date, see FRIESIC, § 58. As the works of Alfred, Ælfric, Cædmon, the poems of Beowulf, and many of the books specified in the note below,† afford ample specimens of pure

The whole book, therefore, consists of 88 leaves, or 176 pages. It was published again in small 4to. with L'Isle's "Treatise concerning the Old and New Testament," in 1628: the Easter Homily was printed again in the 2nd vol. of Fox's "Acts and Monuments," and in the notes to Whelock's "Bede," b. v. c. 22. 10. The Jutes, Angles, and Saxons, had probably some little difference of dialect when they arrived in Britain. Distant tribes, from the disturbed state of the country, and the difficulties of travelling, could have very limited intercourse. The descendants of the Angles were very numerous, and occupied the country north of the Thames: they settled in East-Anglia, Northumbria, south of Scotland, &c. Their language was more broad and harsh than the West-Saxon, and was formerly called the Dano-Saxon dialect. It may,

* Mr. Cardale has well remarked:—"Pure Anglo-Saxon and Dano-Saxon were the two great dialects of the language. The pure A.-S. was used, as Hickes observes, in the southern and western parts of England; and the Dano-Saxon, in the north of England and south of Scotland. It is entirely a gratuitous supposition, to imagine that either of these dialects commenced at a much later period than the other. Each was probably as old as the time of Egbert. . . . The Saxons were predominant in the southern and western parts, and the Angles in the northern. As these nations were distinct in their original seats on the continent, so they arrived at different times, and brought with them different dialects. This variety of speech continued till the Norman conquest, and even afterwards. . . . These two great dialects of the A.-S. continued substantially distinct, as long as the language itself was in use . . . that the Dano-Saxon, in short, never superseded the A.-S. . . . They were not consecutive, but contemporary."—Notes prefixed to Mr. Cardale's elegant edition of Boethius.

Another gentleman, to whom A.-S. literature is also much indebted, thus states his opinion: "Saxon MSS. ought to be locally classed, before any attempt be made at chronological arrangement; nor will this appear strange when we consider, that in early times the several divisions of the kingdom were, comparatively speaking, almost like foreign countries to each other; that in some parts the Saxon must have continued uninfluenced by foreign idioms much longer than in others; that the various provincial dialects must have been much more strongly marked than they are at present, and that they were all equally employed in literary composition."—Mr. Thorpe's Preface to Cædmon, pp. xii. xiii.

Mr. Thorpe mentions Mr. Joseph Stephenson, of the British Museum, as the gentleman from whom we may hope for a local classification of our Saxon MSS. Perhaps it would be difficult to find a gentleman more competent for so arduous a work, if we form a judgment of Mr. Stephenson's qualifications only from the valuable matter collected from old MSS. and judiciously inserted by him in the first two parts of Boucher's English Glossary of Archaic and Provincial Words, 4to. 1832-1833.

† This is one of the finest specimens of Saxon writing. The Vulgate Latin text of the Four Gospels was written by Eadfrid Bishop of Lindisfarne, about A. ## LITERAL ENGLISH.

An. 1135. In this year went the king Henry over sea at the Lammas; and the next day, as he lay asleep on ship, darkened the day over all lands, and was the sun so as it were a three-night-old moon, and the stars about him at mid-day. Men were very much astonished and terrified, and said that a great event should come hereafter. So it did; for that same year was the king dead, the next day after St. Andrew's mass-day, in Normandy. Then was tribulation soon in the land; for every man that might, soon robbed another. Then his sons and his friends took his body, and brought it to England, and buried it at Reading. A good man he was; and there was great dread of him. No man durst do wrong with another in his time. Peace he made for man and beast. Whoso bare his burthen of gold and silver, durst no man say ought to him but good.

15. The Ormulum is a metrical paraphrase of the Gospels and Acts, in lines of fifteen syllables, written in Semi-Saxon by an ecclesiastic named Orm, probably in the north of England, about the year 1180.† The author gives the following reason for the name of the work:

This book is named Ormulum, for that Orm made it.

Ðiff boc iff nemmedd Orrmulum, forrþi þæt Orrm itt wrohhte.—Preface.

Mr. Thorpe observes, that the author seems to have been a critic in his mother-tongue; and from his idea of doubling the consonant after a short vowel, as in German, we are enabled to form some tolerably accurate notions as to the pronunciation of our forefathers. Thus he writes min and win with a single n only, and lif with a single f, because the i is long, as in mine, wine, and life. On the other hand, wherever the consonant is doubled, the vowel preceding is short and sharp, as winn, pronounced win, not wine. Orm's dialect merits, if any, to be called Dano-Saxon: his name also betrays a Scandinavian descent.*

Upon the third day (it) happened, as some of the Gospels say, that in the land of Galilee was a bridal prepared;
And it was prepared in a town that was Cana called,
and Christ's mother, Mary, was at that bridal's seat.
And Christ was invited to that house with his disciples.
And their wine was drunk, so that there was not then any more.

16. Robert of Gloucester‡ was a monk belonging to the abbey at Gloucester, who wrote a history of England in rhyming verse about A.D. 1280. He declares that he saw the eclipse which happened in 1264, on the day of the battle at Evesham, and thus describes it:

As in þe Norþ West a derk weder þer aros,

He translated the Bible and Testament, and even the Apocryphal books, from Latin into English, in the year 1380. Though Wiclif's writing may be called Old English, yet a specimen from the parable of the Sower is given that it may be compared with the preceding translations.

19. It is evident, from the preceding extracts, that the pure West-Saxon did not ever prevail over the whole of England, and that in process of time the language approached more or less to the present English, according to its relative position to the West-Saxons. In early times there was, clearly, considerable dialectic variety in the writings of men residing in different provinces. This will be evident by comparing the short specimens from the Northumbrian and Rushworth glosses,† and the extract from the Saxon Chronicle,‡ with the quotation from Marshall's Anglo-Saxon Gospels,|| and other works in pure Anglo-Saxon. The difference observable in the language of the most cultivated classes would be still more marked and apparent in the mass of population, or the less educated community. These, from their agricultural pursuits, had little communication with the inhabitants of other provinces; and having few opportunities and little inducement to leave their own neighbourhood, they intermarried among each other, and, from their limited acquaintance and circumscribed views, they would naturally be much attached to their old manners, customs, and language. The same cause operating from age to age would keep united the greater part of the population, or the families of the middle stations of life, it may, therefore, be well expected that much of the peculiarity of dialect prevalent in Anglo-Saxon times, is preserved even to the present day in the provincial dialects of the same districts. In these local dialects, then, remnants of the Anglo-Saxon tongue may be found in its least altered, most uncorrupt, and therefore its purest state. Having a strong and expressive language of their own, they had little desire and few opportunities to adopt foreign idioms or pronunciation, and thus to corrupt the purity of their ancient language. Our present polished phrase and fashionable pronunciation are often new, and, as deviating from primitive usage, faulty and corrupt. We are, therefore, much indebted to those zealous and patriotic individuals who have referred us to the archaisms of our nervous language, by publishing provincial glossaries, and giving specimens of their dialects.*

20. So much has been advanced with the view of showing, that what is generally termed "vulgar language," deserves some notice, and claims our respect from its direct descent from our high-spirited Anglo-Saxon ancestors, and from its power of expression. It is not asserted that any provincial dialect has issued in a full and uncontaminated stream from the pure Anglo-Saxon fountain; but in every province some streamlets flow down from the fountain-head, retaining their original purity and flavour, though not now relished perhaps by fastidious palates. None can boast that they retain the language of their early forefathers unimpaired, but all may prove that they possess strong traces of it.†

† Forby's Easi-Anglia, vol. i. p. 18.

21. A few specimens of provincial dialects are given, beginning with extracts from Mr. Jennings's neat and valuable little work, being the present dialect of that part where the West-Saxon or pure Anglo-Saxon was once spoken, and then proceeding to East-Anglia, and terminating with the broad dialect of Craven in Yorkshire. In attempting to give the exact pronunciation of each district, some words are so disguised as, at the first view, to be scarcely recognised, and occasionally two or more words are pronounced, and therefore written, as one word. This is an ambiguity which could not be entirely avoided; but an ample compensation is made for it by giving the words, as far as possible, in the pronunciation of the several provincial districts.

The following are some of the peculiarities observable in the West of England.

The people of Somersetshire, east of the river Parret, make the third person singular of the indicative mood, present tense, to end in th or eth; thus for he loves, he reads, they uniformly say, he lov'th, he read'th. They use Ise for I, er for he, and her for she.—They sound â as a in father; and e as the French e, or as the English a in cane, fane, &c.—Th is sounded as d: for thread they say dread or dird; for through dro, thrash drash: s as z, Zummerzet for Somerset, &c.—They invert the order of some consonants: for thrush, brush, rush, they say dirsh, birsh, hirsh; for clasp, hasp, asp, they use claps, haps, aps.—They annex y to the infinitive mood, and some other parts of many of the common verbs, I can't sewy, he can't reapy, to sewy, to nursy: they also prefix letters; for lost, gone, bought, they say alost, agone, abought.—They often make dissyllables of monosyllables: for air, both, fair, fire, sure, &c. they say, ayer, booäth, fayer, shower, &c.—I be, thou beest or bist, thee beest, we be, they or thâ be, are commonly heard; but rarely or never he be, but he is.—War is always used for was and were; as I war, thee or thou wart, he war, we war, they or thâ war.—We often hear we'm, you'm, they'm, for we are, you are, they are.—They use thic for that; as thic house, thic man, for that house, that man.—The diphthong oi is often pronounced wi: for spoil, boil, point, soil, we have spwile, bwile, pwint, swile, &c.—In and, d is often omitted, as you an I.—In the present participle and other words in ing, g is omitted; for loving, hearing, singing, lightning, they say lovin, hearin or hirin, zingin, lightnin.

As specimens of the Somerset dialect, a dedication in verse, and a short dialogue in prose, will be sufficient.

The Dialect of East-Anglia, or Norfolk and Suffolk.

24. "The most general and pervading characteristic of East-Anglian pronunciation," says Mr. Forby, "is a narrowness and tenuity, precisely the reverse of the round, sonorous, 'mouth-filling' tones of the north of England. The broad and open sounds of vowels, the rich and full tones of diphthongs, are generally thus reduced. Generally—not universally. Some few words become broader, but they become also harsher and coarser. This narrowness of utterance is, in some parts, rendered still more offensive by being delivered in a sort of shrill whining recitative. This prevails chiefly in Suffolk, so as to be called in Norfolk the 'Suffolk whine.' The voice of the speaker (or singer) is perpetually running up and down through half or a whole octave of sharp notes, with now and then a most querulous cadence.*

The following are a few of the common contractions and changes: Duffus for dove or pigeon-house; wuddus wood-house; shant shall not; cant cannot; ont, wont will not; dint did not; shunt should not; wunt would not; mant may not; warnt were not; cent is not; aint is not; heent has not; hant had not.—Tut is used for to it; dut do it; wut with it; het have it; tebbin it has been.—We hear cup for come up; gup go up; gout go out; gin go in; giz give us.—The following are very peculiar: k'ye here, or k'ere; k'ye there; k'ye hinder, or k'inder; k'ye thinder, for look ye here, there, and yonder.—Words are often jumbled together, as in this sentence. M'aunt bod me g'into th'archard, and call m'uncle into house.

Derbyshire Dialect.

25. This dialect is remarkable for its broad pronunciation. In me the e is pronounced long and broad, as mee. The l is often omitted after a or o, as aw for all, caw call, bowd bold, coud cold.—Words in ing generally omit the g, but sometimes it is changed into k; as think for thing, lovin for loving. They use con for can; conner for cannot; shanner for shall not; wool, wooner for will, and will not; yo for you, &c.

Farmer Bennet. Tummus, why dunner yo mend meh shoon?

Conner yo find sum work for m', mester, these hard times?—I'll doo onny think to addle a penny. I con thresh

Tummus L. Why, Hester may-be wor summet to blame too; for her wor one on 'em, de ye zee, that jawd Skimmerton,—the mak-gam that frunted zum o' the gente-fook. They said 'twor time to dun wee sich litter, or sich stuff, or I dunner know what they cawd it; bur they wor frunted wee Hester bout it; an I said, if they wor frunted wee Hester, they mid bee frunted wee mee. This set misses's back up, an Hester hanner bin a charrin there sin. But 'tis no use to bear malice; an zo I'll goo oor, and zee which we the winde blows.

Cheshire Dialect.

26. One peculiarity in the province is to change, or soften, the pronunciation of many words in the middle of which the letter l is preceded by a or o.

Thus in common discourse we pronounce bawk for balk, cauf for calf, hauf for half, wawk for walk, foke for folk, and St. Awbuns for St. Albans; but in the Cheshire dialect, as in all the north, the custom of substituting the o for the a, and the double æ for the igh, prevails in a still greater degree: thus we call all aw; always aways; bold bowed; calf cauf; call caw; can con; cold cowd; colt cowt; fold fowd; gold gowd; false fause; foul fow; fool foo; full foo; fine foin; hold howd; holt howt; half hauf; halfpenny hawpenny; hall haw; long lung; man mon; many mony; manner monner; might meet; mold mowd; pull poo; soft saft; bright breet; scald scaud; stool stoo; right reet; twine twoin; flight fleet; lane loan or lone; mol mal; sight see; sit seet; such sich.

The Lancashire Dialect.

27. Observations on the Lancashire dialect. All and al are generally sounded broad, as aw or o: thus, awl haw or ho, awlus for all, hall, always.—In words ending in ing, k is used for g, as think, wooink, for thing, wooing, &c.—At the end of words d and ed are often changed into t; thus behint, wynt, awtert, for behind, wind, awkward.—The d is sometimes omitted in and, for which they say an.—It is common, in some places, to sound ou and ow as a; thus tha, ka or ca, for thou, cow. In other places, ou and ow have the sound eaw; thus, for thou, cow, house, mouse, they say theaw, keaw, heawse, meawse.—In some parts o is used for a, and a for o; thus, for part, hand, they say port, hont; and instead of for, short, they say far, shart.—The syllable en or 'n is generally used in the plural of verbs, &c. as hat'n, lov'n, think'n.—In Lancashire they generally speak quick and short, and omit many letters, and often pronounce two or three words together; as, I'll got' or I'll gut' for I'll go to; runt' for run to; hoost for she shall; intle or int'll for if thou will; I wou'didd'n for I wish you would.

Tummus and Meary.

Tummus. Odds me! Meary, whooa the dickons wou'd o thowt o' leeting o thee here so soyné this morning? Where has to bin? Theaw'rt aw on a swat, I think; for theaw looks primely.

Meary. Beleemy, Tummus, I welly lost my wynt; for I've had sitch o'traunce this morning as eh neer had e' meh live: for I went to Jone's o'Harry's o'lung Jone's, for't borrow their thible, to stur th' furmetry weh, an his wife had lent it to Bet o' my gronny's; so I skeawrt eend-wey, an' when eh coom there, hoo'd lent it Kester o' Dick's, an the dule steawnd 'im for a brindl't cur, he'd mede it int' shoon pegs! Neaw wou'd naw sitch o moon-shine traunce potter any body's plucks?

Tummus. Mark whot e tell the, Meary; for I think lunger ot fok liv'n an' th' moor mischoances they han.

Meary. Not awlus.—But whot meys o't' sowgh, on seem so dane-kest? For I con tell o' I'd fene see o' whick an hearty.

Tummus. Whick an hearty too! oddzo, but I con tell the whot, its moor in bargin ot I'm oather whick or hearty, for 'twur seign peawnd t'a tuppunny jannock, I'd bin os deead os o dur nele be this awer; for th' last oandurth boh one me measter had lik't o killt meh: on just neaw, os shure os thee and me ar stonning here, I'm actilly running meh country.

Giles. Wha, when't bent's snod, hask, cranchin an slaap, it's a strang sign of a pash.

30. Many expressive Anglo-Saxon words, which are no longer in use among the refined, have been retained in the provincial dialects. These then ought not to be neglected. The facility and simplicity of combining several short indigenous words to express any complex idea, practised by the Anglo-Saxons and other Gothic nations, is now too seldom used. Instead of adopting technical terms from other languages, or forming them from the Greek or Latin, as is the present English custom, our Anglo-Saxon forefathers formed words equally expressive by composing them from their own radical terms. For our literature they used boc-cræft book-craft, from boc a book, cræft art, science; for arithmetic rimcræft, from rim a number, cræft art; for astronomy tungelcræft, from tungel a star, &c. If, however, we have lost in simplicity, we have gained in copiousness and euphony. In collecting from other languages, the English have appropriated what was best adapted to their purpose, and thus greatly enriched their language. Like bees they have diligently gathered honey from every flower.* They have now a language which, for copiousness, power, and extensive use, can scarcely be surpassed. It is not only used in England, Scotland, and Ireland, but in the whole of North America and Australia: it prevails in the West Indies, and is more or less spoken in our vast possessions in the east. Indeed, wherever civilization, science, and literature prevail, there the English language is understood and spoken.

* Camden observes: "Whereas our tongue is mixed, it is no disgrace. The Italian is pleasant, but without sinewes, as a still fleeting water. The French delicate, but even nice as a woman, scarce daring to open her lippen, for fear of marring her countenance. The Spanish majesticall, but fulsome, running too much on the o, and terrible like the Divell in a play. The Dutch manlike, but withall very harsh, as one ready at every word to picke a quarrell. Now we, in borrowing from them, give the strength of consonants to the Italian; the full sound of words to the French; the variety of terminations to the Spanish; and the mollifying of more vowels to the Dutch; and so, like bees, we gather the honey of their good properties, and leave the dregs to themselves. And thus, when substantialnesse combineth with delightfulness, fullnesse with finenesse, seemliness with portliness, and currentnesse with staydnesse, how can the language which consisteth of all these, sound other than full of all sweetness?"—Camden's Remains, p. 38, edit. of 1623.

In the following comparison of the Anglo-Saxon with the ancient and modern Friesic, though there may be, in some minor points, a little diversity of opinion between the author and his friend the Rev. J. H. Halbertsma, yet it would be unjust to make alterations. Mr. Halbertsma has, therefore, been always permitted to speak for himself, and to give his reasons in his own way. Where opinions vary, the author has generally referred to both statements, leaving it to the reader to form his own conclusions from the evidence adduced. Considering this the most equitable mode of statement, he has adopted it, not only in regard to the valuable Essay of Mr. Halbertsma, but towards the works of those from whom he may differ far more widely. He is too conscious of his own liability to err, to be overconfident in his own views. He has given his reasons or authorities, and all that he can confidently assert is, that it has been his constant and earnest wish and endeavour to avoid the natural bias towards the idol self, or that of any party, and to discover and follow truth, whether it favour his own previous opinions, or those of others. Perhaps he may have failed even here. If he have, he will, as soon as it is pointed out, gladly make every acknowledgement and reparation in his power.

IV.—FRIESIC.*

Ancient and Modern Friesic† compared with Anglo-Saxon.

1. Anglo-Saxon being one of those languages called dead, no information about its pronunciation can be obtained from the people themselves. Of course, all knowledge in these matters depends upon the written letters, and upon determining the sound of those letters.

2. This, however, is a very difficult task. There is no connexion at all between visible marks and audible sounds: the letters serve more to indicate the genus, than the species of the sounds, and use alone can teach us the shades (nuances) of pronunciation.

* “ In comparing kindred languages with each other, the scholar will generally start from the point where he was born. Rask usually refers the A.-S. to the Scandinavian tongues, especially to the Icelandic. Germans have chiefly recourse to the Theotisc, and what is called by them Saxon. Others will bring it back to the dialects of their country; all with the same aim of elucidating the grammar, or discovering the sounds in A.-S. The reason of this is evidently the intimate acquaintance each of them has with the old and modern dialects of his own country, and most likely the scholar would compare the A.-S. with another class of dialects, if all the tongues of the Germanic branch were as thoroughly known to him as those of his native country. Being a native Friesian, and comparing the A.-S. chiefly with the Friesic, I could scarcely escape the suspicion of having yielded to the same influence as others, if I did not explain my reasons. This, I hope, will be a sufficient excuse for my entering into some details about the primitive relationship between the Anglo-Saxons and the Friesians.

“ As every scholar has his own point de vue in matters of language, I beg leave to have mine. If my principles were unknown to my readers, my rules, depending on these principles, would, as void of foundation, be unintelligible. It is for this reason that I have here inserted some of my opinions about the pedigree and comparison of languages, appearing properly to belong more to general grammar than to my present subject.

“ As history often fails in showing the full truth of my opinion about the relationship between the Angles and the Friesians, I had recourse to the languages. Hence a view of the remnants of the Friesic both dead and still flourishing is here presented, and compared with the English and A.-S. It pleases not the muse of history to speak but late, and then in a very confused manner. Yes, she often deceives, and before she is come to maturity, she seldom distinctly tells the truth. Language never deceives, but speaks more distinctly, though removed to a far higher antiquity.

“ It is at the request of my dear friend Bosworth that I write in English, a language in which I have not been favoured with any instruction. I possess only some dim feeling of analogy between its manner of speaking and my native tongue. I, therefore, grant to my English readers the full freedom of smiling at my thousand and one Friesianisms, while I shall have reached my aim if I am only understood.

“ J. H. HALBERTSMA.”

3. The simple sounds we assign to letters, bears no proportion to the diphthongal nature of almost every sound in A.-S.

The inhabitants of Hindelopen still retain some A.-S. sounds undefiled. When I first heard some old people speak in this little town, I was quite astonished how sounds so compounded and diphthongal as those could be pronounced with so much ease and fluency. What is more simple in writing than the words lêod, A.-S. leód people; neugen, A.-S. nigen nine? When you hear these words at Hindelopen, you will find that the pronunciation baffles every effort of the grammarian to invent signs giving an adequate idea of its nature. In the eu you hear first the y, then the eu blended with the French ou, ending in oi. Such words as lêod people, and neugen-end-neugentig nine-and-ninety, are, for this reason, Hindeloepen shibboleths above all imitation of their own countrymen, the other Friesians.

4. Besides this, the sounds of letters are in restless fluctuation. If we could trace the changes in the sound of letters, our success would exceed our hopes; but even this discovery could not give an adequate idea of the sound of letters in use at any period, for sounds are altered when the letters remain still unchanged. The English and French languages give full proof of this truth.

When they enter into the class of dead languages, there will still be greater difficulties in ascertaining the pronunciation of chateau, and eschew. When, after long investigation, you discover that chateau ought to be pronounced ha-te-au, as the Picardians pronounce it at this very day, you find that by the tyranny of custom it is enervated to sya-to; when also you discover that the English first pronounced e-schew, and afterwards es-tshow (ou French), how few readers will believe your assertions, seeing that these words remain expressed by the same letters.

5. The sounds of a language, like other things, are, by time, subject to mutations, and these changes are homogeneous or heterogeneous, according as the cause of change is internal or external. In this way, diphthongs become vowels, and vowels again diphthongs. An elaborate treatise would point out the changes in a language, if an uninterrupted succession of MSS. of different ages could be procured.

6. Independent of these succeeding general changes of the whole language, there are diversities existing at the same time, called dialects. The A.-S. is subject to these diversities in the highest degree, and with a free people it could not be otherwise. When a nation easily submits to an absolute sway, individuals have little attachment to what is their own in character and opinions, and easily suffer themselves to be modelled in one general mould of the court or priesthood. On the other hand, when a nation, as the Angles and Friesians, is jealous of its liberty, and will only submit to the law enacted for the public good, while every individual regulates his private affairs for himself, the slightest peculiarity of character, unrestrained by the assumed power of any mortal, develops itself freely in the proper expressions, and every individuality is preserved. This I believe is the reason why in the province of Friesland are more peculiarities than in the other six provinces of the present kingdom of the Netherlands, and more in England alone than in the whole of Europe.

Applying this principle in language, the very mirror of the soul, we find the same variety; so that among a people so fond of liberty as the Angles and Friesians, not only every district, but every village, nay, every hamlet, must have a dialect of its own. The diversity of dialects since the French Revolution of 1795, is much decreasing by the centralisation of power taking daily more effect in the Netherlands: the former republic, by leaving to every village the management of its domestic affairs, preserved every dialect unimpaired. Nevertheless, at this very time, those living on the coast of Eastmahorn, in Friesland, do not understand the people of Schiermonikoog, a little island with one village of the same name, almost in sight of the coast. The Hindelopians speak a dialect unintelligible to those living at the distance of four miles from them. Nay, the Friesians have still dialects within a dialect.

In the village where I was born, we said indiscriminately, after, efter, and æfter, A.-S. æfter; tar, and tær, A.-S. tare; par, and pær, A.-S. pera; tarre, and tære conuere, A.-S. teran; kar, and kær, A.-S. cyre; hi lei, and hi lái, A.-S. læg; perfect tense of ik lizz', hi leit, A.-S. licge, lið; smarre, and smære, A.-S. smerian; warre and wære, warge and wærga, A.-S. weran, werian tueri, resistere. On this matter I can produce a very striking example in the centre of Friesian nationality. It is now, I believe, sixteen years since I spoke to an old woman at Molquerum, a village now almost lying in ruins, but still divided into seven little islands, called Pollen, joined to each other by (breggen A.-S. bricgas) little bridges. Now the good woman told me in her homely style, that when she was a child, every island had its peculiar way of pronouncing, and that when an inhabitant of any of the villages entered her mother's house, she could easily ascertain to which Pol the person belonged, merely by some peculiarity of speech. Dependence may be placed on this fact, as I have ascertained its truth by strict inquiry. I have no doubt the same peculiarity was observable in almost every village of the Anglo-Saxons. Every Englishman who notices the diversity of dialects to be found in Yorkshire, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, or Lancashire, and by these judges of the rest, and considers what they have formerly been, will perhaps enter, in some measure, into my views.

7. This fact fully accounts for the discrepancies in the forms of words, occurring nearly in every page of a genuine A.-S. author. Not writing by established, often arbitrary rules of grammar, he wrote just as he spoke; his writing was, therefore, the true representation of his dialect.

8. There still exists another cause, which, though not less productive of variety in writing, ought to be carefully distinguished from variety of dialect. The diphthongal nature of the whole system of A.-S. vowels made it difficult for every writer to know by what letters to indicate the proper sounds of his words. Unable to satisfy himself, he often interchanged kindred vowels in the same words, at one time putting a or éo, and afterwards æ and y. Diversities arising from this cause are of the most frequent occurrence even in the oldest Anglo-Saxon MSS.

9. This diversity in the spelling of a word is of the greatest importance to one who would ascertain the true pronunciation of the Anglo-Saxon. While the writer is groping about him for proper letters, we guess the sound he wished to express by assuming some middle sound between the letters he employs. This advantage would have been totally lost to us if the orthography of the Anglo-Saxon could boast of the same uniformity as that of the English recorded in Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary.

10. In this respect we owe a thousand thanks to Lye, who gives us the Anglo-Saxon words as he found them, and never alters the orthography to suit his own views.

At the head of his articles he occasionally attributes to the word a vowel which it has not. For instance, he puts the a in staf and lat, which these words have only when a second syllable is added, as in late, stafa: when monosyllables, they are written stæf a staff, læt late. Whether he considered the vowel he inserts as the primitive one, or did not know the laws of permutation in Anglo-Saxon vowels, matters not, as it is impossible to be misled by them, standing alone and without any authority. He moreover rectifies his faults by his citations, in which neither staf nor lat occur. Such trifling mistakes should not obscure his immense merits in faithfully giving us the vowels of the Anglo-Saxon authors, with all their odd and lawless exertions to express the sounds they heard.

11. I fear that those who credit what I have stated about the diversity of Anglo-Saxon and Friesian dialects, will consider these infinite variations as the curse of Babel. They will, however, permit me to say, that human speech in general has its mechanical rules fixed by the frame of the organs of speech, to which all tongues submit. This frame admits modifications to which every nation yields. These modifications admit of farther modifications, to which not only districts, but even villages are liable. Therefore, every language is of necessity what it is, and it is not in the power of fancy or choice to obey or disobey these laws. From this cause proceeds much of the diversity in language.

12. From the sounds which can be pronounced, every nation selects those which are best adapted to the frame of his organs, and the feelings he endeavours to express.

Now this choice, in which we are free, opens an immense field for diversities in tongues; but, whatever the choice may be, the first grasp decides all the rest: every consonant brings its corresponding consonant, and the vowel its corresponding vowel. In a word, every language is a compact, well-framed whole, in which all the parts sympathize with each other. Insult one of its essential properties, and the disgrace will be felt through the whole system. Remove one series of its original place, and all the others will follow the motion. What is true of any language may be asserted of any of its branches or dialects. Reason and never-failing experience vindicate the justice of these conclusions. The dialect corresponds to itself in its dialects, and the principle on which the form of a word is framed, is always followed in similar cases. If this analogy be unobserved, it is not the fault of the dialect, but of the dim sight of the observer. The majority of grammarians deem dialects lawless deviations in the speech of the dull mob, to which they attach all that is coarse, vulgar, confused, and ridiculous. Indeed, the chaos of tongues then begins, when grammarians, ignorant of the operations of the mind, and its exertions to express its thoughts, obtrude their arbitrary rules,* and, by heterogeneous mixtures, ever fertile in producing others, set the well-framed system of sounds in inextricable confusion. Regardless of the interior structure, wholly unknown to eyes gliding over the surface of things, they use language as the rich but ignorant man his library, who, deeming it to be a matter of chief importance that his books should be of the same size, ordered them all to be cut to 8vo. and 12mo. The public is not generally expert in forming a judgment on these matters: weighing no argument, it regards only the tone of the proposer, and places its confidence in him who is the boldest in his assertions, though he is generally the most ignorant—for the greatest ignorance is ever accompanied with the greatest assurance. However men may suffer themselves to be imposed upon, nature still defends her rights. As our bodies have hidden resources and expedients, to remove the obstacles which the very art of the physician often puts in its way, so language, ruled by an indomitable inward principle, triumphs in some degree over the folly of grammarians. Look at the English, polluted by Danish and Norman conquests, distorted in its genuine and noble features by old and recent endeavours to mould it after the French fashion, invaded by a hostile entrance of Greek and Latin words, threatening by increasing hosts to overwhelm the indigenous terms; in these long contests against the combined might of so many forcible enemies, the language, it is true, has lost some of its power of inversion in the structure of sentences, the means of denoting the differences of gender, and the nice distinctions by inflexion and termination—almost every word is attacked by the spasm of the accent and the drawing of consonants to wrong positions; yet the old English principle is not overpowered. Trampled down by the ignoble feet of strangers, its spring still retains force enough to restore itself; it lives and plays through all the veins of the language, it impregnates the innumerable strangers entering its dominions with its temper, and stains them with its colour, not unlike the Greek, which in taking up oriental words stripped them of their foreign costume, and bid them appear as native Greeks.

13. But to return.—In human language, as in the whole creation, the great law of beauty and happiness is this—variety in unity. Though there are great difficulties in discovering the true pronunciation of Anglo-Saxon, we have still left to us two means of investigation. First, the comparison of its vowels and consonants with those of a kindred dialect existing at a more remote period; and secondly, the same comparison with a kindred dialect of posterior age, both as it is written and still spoken—for, however altered in some of its features, it must still retain genuine traits of its original countenance. The Gothic or Mæso-Gothic* will answer for the first, and the Friesic the second; two languages combining the advantage that the nations who spoke them bordered on the Anglo-Saxons, the Mæso-Goths on the north, and the Friesians on the south, and by enclosing the Anglo-Saxons, limit their influence, both as it respects their geography and language.

14. It is evident that all the tongues spoken by the great people which the Romans called Germani, considered on a large scale, appear as dialects all issuing from one common source. There was a time when all these languages were one. If we could mount sufficiently high in the scale of time, we should arrive at the period when the progenitors of all the tribes were gathered within the compass of a little camp under a few tents, and spoke one language, containing the germs of all the diversities by which the dialects of their posterity were distinguished. The nearer we approach this time and place, the more will all the Germanic tongues become similar to each other, and their boundaries vanish by which at present they are enclosed. For this reason, the oldest and best poet of the Greeks, retaining symptoms of a particular dialect, blends in his poems all the dialects of Greece. In regard to antiquity, the Gothic of Ulphilas, being written about A.D. 360, has the precedence of any Anglo-Saxon MSS. by four or five hundred years. In comparing the Anglo-Saxon with the Gothic, we shall have the double advantage of measuring by a standard approaching nearest the genuine dimensions, and of approaching to a nearer contact with those kindred tongues which subsequently developed themselves into more striking differences.

15. The nearer we approach the source, the more pure will be the water. If the development of language were left to its natural course, without any disturbing shock or foreign influence, all things would change according to the established rules of nature, and every word bear in its changes some resemblance to its primitive state. But every age brings on some disturbance of the system, and the intermixture of foreign ingredients, originating in wars, migrations, revolutions, and other causes, introduces so many changes, that in some respects the rule is overthrown by the exceptions, and the language rendered quite unfit for comparison. A sufficient reason can be given for the present state of disorder only by ascending to the period of order, and not by a comparison of the dialects lying in their present confusion. Now the higher the step on which we can observe the language, the less it is disturbed in its original structure, and the better adapted for the standard of comparison. It is the high age of the Gothic, and its real character, known by what is remaining of it, which in these respects stamps its value. Spoken by one unmixed tribe of warriors, it appears on the stage fresh and unpolluted, quite original and sui generis, with members of due proportion, and dressed in its own native costume, without a shred of foreign ornament.

16. The advantages derived from a comparison with a language of this sort, may be exemplified by some names of the numbers.

The English having composed eleven and twelve from én, twé, and lifén, you would conclude that they would express unus, duo, by én, twé; but no, they say one, two. The Dutchman says twalf, veertien, from twa and veer; but his simple numbers are twé, vier. The German has his zwanzig twenty, and zwei two. The country Friesian uses olwe, tóalf, tretjen, with manifest indication of Runic admixture, from ellefu eleven, tólf twelve, þrettán thirteen, from the Icelandic tveir and þrír. Their twenty has the sound of tweintich—ought they not to say also to two, træ three, one one, as the Hindelopians do? Rather incongruously they use íen, twá, trye; and having fjouwer four, they compose tsjien with vier into fjirtjen fourteen. Hence, when the numbers were composed, the English had the Dutch én and twé; the Dutch had the Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, and modern Friesic twa, with the Germans; the country Friesians had the one, two, of the English. Would not these tongues, when taken as a basis for analogical research, lead into a thousand mistakes? If in English the number eleven were unknown to you, would you not say, from analogy, that it was formed from one, on-leven contracted into olven? It is not known in Gothic, but we may be sure that ai in ains one, will not be disowned in ainlif, as twa is not in twalif, nor twaim duobus in twaimtigum (d. pl.) twenty. In the same analogical manner the Anglo-Saxons compose words, þreo three, þreotyne thirteen, twegen two, originally twen, twenluf contracted to twelf; án by pushing the accent æn-d-lufan. Does not Kero make, from zuene two, zuelifn twelve? In Otfrid, from zuei two, zueinzig? Finally, does not the old Friesian, from twia twice, or twi, Ab. 1, 93; thré three, Ab. 177, træ Hindelopian; fiuwer four, flower, Ab. 1, 5, 87, form analogically twilif twelve, Ab. 14; thredtine thirteen, Ab. 19, 93; fiuwertine fourteen, Ab. 19, 94?

17. There still exists another anomaly in the numerals.

The Greeks and Romans, counting only by tens, composed their numbers from ten to twenty with δεκα, decem ten; ινδεκα, undecim eleven; δωδεκα, duodecim twelve. The German tribes form the same numerals in a similar manner, except eleven and twelve, which were composed with Ger. lif; A.-S. læfan, lif, lef, l'f, in other dialects. But as this anomaly entered our numeral system in a period anterior to the history of our tongues, and is common to all the Germanic languages, the analogy between the kindred dialects is not disturbed by these irregularities, but rather advanced.

18. The cause of this disturbance lies in the old practice of using both ten and twelve as fundamental numbers.

The advance was by ten, thus þrittig, Country Friesic tritich; feowertig, Ab. 2, &c. but on arriving at sixty the series was finished, and another begun, denoted by prefixing hund. This second series proceeded to one hundred and twenty, thus: hundnigontig ninety; hundteontig a hundred; hundenlufontig a hundred and ten; hundtwelftig a hundred and twenty: here the second series concluded. It thus appears, that the Anglo-Saxons did not know our hundred = 100, as the chief division of numbers; and, though they counted from ten to ten, they, at the same time, chose the number twelve as the basis of the chief divisions. As we say  $5 \times 10 = 50$ ,  $10 \times 10 = 100$ , they multiplied 5 and 10 by 12, and produced 60 and 120. When the Scandinavians adopted a hundred as a chief division [ $100 = 10 \times 10$ ], they still retained one hundred and twenty; and calling both these numbers hundred, they distinguished them by the epithets little or ten hundred, lill-hundrad or hundrad tírad, and great or the twelve number hundred, stor-hundrade or hundrad tólfræd. The Danes count to forty by tens, thus, tredivé thirty, fyrretyve forty; and then commence by twenties, thus, halvtrediesindstyve, literally in *A.-S. þridda héalf síðon twentig\** [two twenties], and the third twenty half, i. e. fifty. The Icelanders call 2500 half þridie þusand, [Dut. derdehalfduizend,] i. e. two thousand, and the third thousand half; firesindotyve [four-times twenty] eighty, and so on to a hundred. The Francs, being a mixture of kindred nations from the middle of Germany, when they entered Gallia, partly adopted the Anglo-Saxon mode of numeration, and partly that of the Danes, and they afterwards translated verbally their vernacular names of the numerals by Latin words. From twenty to fifty it proceeds in the usual manner, vingt, trente, quarante, cinquante, soixants; but having arrived at seventy, the same place where the Anglo-Saxons commenced with hund, hundseofontig, it uses soixantedix, quatrevingt, just as the Danes express eighty by firesindstyve four-times twenty. As it appears that the old Germans had two fundamental numbers, ten and twelve, it follows that eleven and twelve are the last two numerals of the twelve series, and the first two in the ten series; hence perhaps came the use of the termination lif or luf, in eleven and twelve.

* The ellipsis of the two twenties is supplied in the expression twa geare and þridde healf two years and half the third year, literally in Frs. c. twa jier in 't tredde heal, but custom contracts it to tredde heal jier. Hickes compares this ellipsis with the Scotch expression half ten, which is also the Dut. half tien, but in this he is not accurate. The Country Friesians not having this ellipsis, prove that it must be supplied in another way. They say, healwei trjienen half way of the present hour to ten o'clock. Dr. Dorow has also fallen into the same mistake, p. 127, Denkwäler, I. 2 and 3.

19. Let us still add another example.

The conjugation of the Anglo-Saxon verb stigan ascendere, and the Gothic steigan, is thus inflected: ic stige, steiga; he stihð, steigith he ascends; he stáh, staig he ascended; we stígon, stígum we ascended. Here it appears, that the Gothic ei corresponds with the A.-S. i; ai with á; í with í. Now I conclude, if the evolution of both languages was regulated by the same principle, there must be an analogy between the vowels in similar instances. Indeed we do observe the same analogy preserved in verbs of the same class. Let us take, for instance, gripan, arisan, and spiwan:

A.-S. gripan to gripe ;	gripe, gripð ;	gráp, grípon .
Moes. greipan to gripe ;	greipa, greipith ;	graip, gripum .
A.-S. arisan to arise ;	arise, arist ;	arás, aríson .
Moes. reisan to arise ;	reisa, reisith ;	rais, rísum .
A.-S. spiwan to vomit ;	spiwe, spiwð ;	spáw, spíwun .
Moes. speiwan to spit ;	speiwa, speiwith ;	spaiw, spiwum .

20. These instances are all regular, but as soon as ever the accustomed evolution is disturbed in its course, the analogy is gone.

Thus, the verb scinan to shine, ic scine I shine, he scinð he shines, we scínon we shone, corresponds to skeinan, skeina, skeinith, skinum. The long á, however, in scán, Gothic skain, by some error being changed into short a, this short a is converted into éat and forms scéan shone. It has already been observed, that every dialect corresponds in its several parts, and that a certain form in the present tense brings on a certain form in the perfect tense. Of course the practice of some grammarians, in forming the conjugation of a verb out of the present tense of one dialect, and the perfect tense of another dialect, is contrary to the first rule of sound analogy. If any dialect had scunan or scéonan, the perfect tense scéan would not be an exception, as it is when appertaining to scinan.

21. It is a most happy circumstance, that the Gothic, and not the Theotisc, had the advantage of being recorded in the oldest monument of Germanic literature. Though much of the coincidence of this language with all its kindred dialects may be owing to its age, it owes still more in this respect to its locality in the genealogy of language.

22. It is hardly necessary to observe, that there is scarcely a single word in the A.-S. which we do not also find in all the kindred German dialects. We do not ask whether an A.-S. word can be found in the language of the Scandinavians, the Goths, or Theotiscans, but, to which of these it has the nearest relationship? In an etymological point of view, the great point is to ascertain the species, and not merely the genus; to discover to which particular dialect a word is most closely allied, and not to be satisfied with pointing out to what sort of language it belongs.

23. There are three chief species, of which the Anglo-Saxon and the Friesic take the left side, the Theotisc or Alemannic the right side, and the Icelandic, Mæso-Gothic, Westphalian or Saxon, and Netherlandish, the middle: that is, so far as the vowels and consonants are concerned.

The Anglo-Saxon agrees in the consonants with the middle series, represented by the Mæso-Gothic, but in some important points it differs from the Mæso-Gothic and the Theotisc in its vowels, and has a system of its own. On the other hand, the Theotisc agrees with the Gothic in its vowels, having regard to the lapse of time and dialectic variations. In the consonants, the Theotisc is as different from Gothic and Anglo-Saxon, as the Anglo-Saxon is in its vowels from the Gothic and Theotisc, and I venture to say still more original; for, the consonants have not only quitted their old ranks, but those into which they have entered are also disorbed. The Gothic, then, being allied to the consonants of the Anglo-Saxon and the vowels of the Theotisc, is thus the proper standard of comparison for all the Gothic tongues, having been, from its locality, connected with them all. Thus the Gothic diups deep is allied by the vowels ix to the Theotisc tiuf, and by the consonants d and p to the Anglo-Saxon deop.

24. The Gothic has some peculiarities, which, whether they arise from its place in the pedigree of tongues, or its seniority, exemplify similar peculiarities in other languages.

For instance, the Icelandic is noted for the termination r or ur, which, in kindred tongues, changes into one of the vowels, and these vowels again into the lean sheva e; thus, diupr deep, A.-S. deop, or deope. For the r the Gothic uses s, as the Latin arbor, honor, for arbor, honor; thus Goth. diups deep; A.-S. wæg, geard; Theotisc wec, karto; Gothic wigs, gards, are in Icelandic vegr and gardr.

25. These observations may account for the different opinions of philologers in determining the just relations of the Germanic tongues. The reducing them all to Gothic origin was an exuberant spring of error. The Gothic is not of such antiquity as to boast in being the mother of all Germanic tongues with which we became acquainted in a latter period. In the age of Ulphilas, it was a dialect of Germanic lineage, having other dialects by its side, as the Anglo-Saxon, which in the 4th century differed less from the Gothic than in the 9th century. It will be enough for my purpose to observe, that all critics do not agree in arranging the pedigree of the Gothic. The reason is evident.

26. The Gothic or Mæso-Gothic is a language of transition or passage. If you consider the vowels of a word, you make it of Gothic origin: another, only looking at the consonants, will assert it has nothing to do with the Gothic. Some, only keeping in view grammatical forms, discover similarity of structure in the language of the Heliand; while others, neglecting vowels, consonants, and grammatical forms, will only fix their attention on the etymological meaning of the word, and will find another filiation.

It is evident that the A.-S. mot a coin,* as to the vowel, is nearer the Gothic mota

custom-house,* than Ger. maut custom-house; but, as to etymological sense, maut is nearer to the Gothic mota; and though the word mota may be older and more complete than the A.-S. mot, the signification of coin was anterior to that of custom-house. In this case, the Icelandic and Friesic still mount a step higher than the Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, or German, e.g. the Icel. móta insculpo, typico, and mót typus; Frs. c. moet an impression, gives origin to the idea of a coin, as coin does of the house where the tax-money was gathered.—The Theotisc mahal concio, curia, agrees with the Moes. mathls forum, as to the vowel and signification, but the A.-S. meðel sermo as to the consonant ð: we find also Moes. mathlei sermo, which agrees with A.-S. meðel, both in the consonants and the signification.—Feawa few, pauci, has the w of Moes. fawai pauci, but the Theotisc fahe few, the vowel. If we consider the a in Icel. vargr furiosus, it is nearer the Moes. wargjan damnare, than the A.-S. wergean to curse, maledicere, but in the signification the A.-S. draws nearer. Let us take an English example: the word abb the yarn on a weaver's warp. The w (pronounced nearly as Eng. v) being the aspiration of the lips, is often changed into h, the aspiration of the throat, as fahe, for fawai. The Moes. biwaibjan to surround, encompass, from waips a garland, sertum, A.-S. wefan to weave, Theotisc uueban, Grk. ὑφαίνω, from ὑφαίνω. The Scandinavians cast away both these aspirations in the perf. of eg vef I weave, saying vóf, vaf, and of, hence of tela in use by the Scandinavians. In abb, then, the a is Icelandic, from vaf, and without the w in of terebam; but the b changes into f, or remains a b, as in the Moes. and in the A.-S. web; Frs. c. wob; both e and o originating from a.

27. From these few examples, it is evident that a word may have as many affinities as the points of view from which it may be observed. The Gothic was a tongue of transmigration, and all Germanic languages coming in contact with it in some point or other, it was very easily imagined to be the mother of the whole race. I may lastly add, on the ground of my own experience, that, having regard only to vowels and consonants, I cannot arrive at the common source of the Germanic tongues, as we trace back human kind to one common father in paradise. History begins too late to permit us to trace, with any satisfaction, even the first half of the period. Let us, therefore, not attempt what is impracticable; but, keeping in mind the seniority of the class at the head of each column, let us range them all in one line, as dialects of the same language. Finding, 1st. the Anglo-Saxon older than the English, the Old Friesic than the Country Friesic,—2ndly, the Mæso-Gothic older than the Swedish,—3rdly, the Theotisc or Alemannic older than the present German; and considering how much of grammatical forms, in the present languages, time may have destroyed, as to the vowels and consonants, the languages must be classified in the following order:—

ANGLO-SAXON, by the intermixing of Old Danish, Nor- man French, Latin, Greek, &c. is formed into English, Scottish, &amp;c.* Friesic, at present divided into Hindelopian, Country Friesic, Schiermonnikogian, Saterlandic, North Friesic, [A small part of the Dutchy of Sleswick ] All these dialects are more or less tainted by the languages of the respective sur- rounding people.	MÆSO-GOTHIC, Old and Modern, Icelandic, mixed with German, Saxon, &c. forms the present Swedish, Danish, &amp;c. Saxon or Westphalian language of the poem Heliand ,† Low-Sax- on .‡ [ Reineke de Vos ,   of Henry van Alkmar, Lubek , 1498.] From the Province of Overysse, along the whole coast of the North - Sea to Sleswick, the Baltic, &c. Netherlandish [ Coren van stat der van Brues- sele , 1229.§] Statutes of the town of Brus- sels. Dutch , now daily be- coming more defiled by Gallicisms and Germanisms.	THEOTISC. [Language of Kero of the xxvi Hymns ,¶ &c.] High German, Bavarian, Austrian , and other dialects. German , a mixture of High - German and some Saxon, [Low- German] as esta- blished by the ver- sion of the Bible by Martin Luther, and since adopted as the general language through the whole of Germany, A.D. 1555.

Willems, Antwerpen, 1819, tom i. p. 133. This piece being the oldest specimen of Netherlandish now extant, fully proves that the present Dutch is mere Brabandish, and that the strongly marked dialectic diversities of these two sisters were formed when the Netherlandish was cultivated in the seven United Provinces. The Netherlandish was called the Vlaemsche tael; the Flemish tongue, la langue Flamande, as long as the southern part of the Netherlands was the most flourishing, and Flanders the chief province. It was called Hollandish [Dutch] after the Spanish revolution, when the northern part was become a powerful republic, and the province of Holland a ruling province. To be a language or dialect, is often merely a question of predominant influence. See VI. 11, 20.

28. Considering the frame of the whole, I take no notice of the little interchanges between the columns—for instance, that the Friesic is nearer to the Icelandic than the Anglo-Saxon. All the three columns are considered as proceeding together, and developing themselves in succeeding ages with more or less facility.* An attempt shall subsequently be made to show the locality of the Germanic languages in a higher period, and how they developed themselves in advancing to the station of the Mæso-Gothic.

* This hypothesis must be regulated by a due attention to the fact, that the first appearance of the Anglo-Saxon in the orbit of languages, is some centuries later than the Mæso-Gothic, which has, therefore, its phases more advanced than the Anglo-Saxon. This consideration is of common application.

29. It must be observed, that the monuments of Friesian literature are of a far more recent date than the Anglo-Saxon; but the development of language does not always depend upon its age. The Friesians, encompassed on the one side by the sea, and on the other by the Saxons, owe it to their geographical position, that they have experienced no mutations but those of a Saxon origin, and in many respects homogeneous with their own language. I do not recollect any intermixture of a foreign language with the Friesian, except what was caused by the frequent inroads of Normans, and by the settlement of some bands of the same race among the Friesians.

30. Add to this, that the language of the Friesians never felt the shock caused by migrations. From the time of Cæsar to this very day, amongst the endless revolutions of nations, they have never changed their name or the place of their residence, and they are noted as an exception to the locomotive temper of the Germanic race.*

31. These causes would render the language so stationary, that it would be less altered in the 12th century, than others in the 10th. In the following comparison, many instances will occur of true Anglo-Saxon sounds still flourishing in Friesland. What I consider still more important, the development of some vowels has produced now the same result as it did eight centuries ago—a convincing proof that the germ of both languages must be homogeneous.

32. Discovering such striking features of likeness, after a separation of almost fourteen centuries, a complete separation by the ocean, by the adventures and the diversity of their means of subsistence, and of the land they occupied, I conclude, that at the time of their union, about the middle of the 5th century, the Anglo-Saxon was distinguished from the Friesic only by slight differences of dialect. We do not become acquainted with the A.-S. before the 8th or 9th century, and with the Friesian not before the 12th or 13th century, about four and eight hundred years after their separation. The series of evolutions each tongue has sustained, affords a full account of the chief discrepancies then existing.†

33. As this whole matter can be proved by a strict comparison, we need not seek for authorities.

If authority were wanted, that of Francis Junius would be amply sufficient. After a long scrutiny of the whole Germanic antiquity in regard to languages; after the compilation of glossaries of almost every dialect of the race, unparalleled in labour and accuracy; after a stay of two years [1652-1654] in those parts of Friesland noted as tenacious of their old manners and language, this scholar has always declared it as his opinion, that, of all the Germanic tongues, none approached so closely to the Anglo-Saxon as the Friesian. This decision will, I trust, outweigh all contrary opinions. As there are few in this century even deserving to march by the side of Junius, so I do not think any one can be vain enough to imagine he is superior.

34. The geographical position of this people in question coincides with their philological pedigree. Let us begin with the Goths, taking care that the epithet Moesian, coupled with their name, does not deceive the common reader. ●

Some fragments of the Periplus of Pytheas, the renowned navigator from Marseilles, inform us, that he, being in search of the amber coasts in the Baltic, doubled the cape of Jutland, and sailed about 6,000 stadia along the coasts of the Guttones and Teutones, through the gulf Mentonomon [Kattegat, Belt, &c.] This was about 325 years before the Christian era. The Guttones or Goths, seated in Jutland, descended afterwards to their brethren at the southern coast of the Baltic,* for the chief seat of the race was on the banks of the Vistula [Weichsel]. After a part was gone into Scandinavia, the great bulk moved thence to the banks of the Danube [Donau] in Dacia [Moldavia and Wallachia, about A.D. 180]. A part of the Goths, called West-Goths, pushed on by the Huns, retired, about A.D. 377, into Mœsia [Serbia and Bulgaria], and hence these Western-Goths obtained the name of Mœso-Goths. It was to this people that Ulphilas, the renowned translator of the Scriptures, was bishop.

35. On the southern borders of the ancient Goths were seated the Angles, spreading southward perhaps to the banks of the Eider. The chief town of these people at a later date was Haddeby or Haithaby, A.-S. Hæðe in Schleswig, or Sleswick.

36. While the Angles filled nearly the whole of the Chersonesus Cimbricus, they were bordered on the west by another people of their kindred. These were the Friesians, whose posterity still live in the district of Bredstedt near the coast of the sea, and whose dialect will afford some words for comparison.

Hence the Friesians spread themselves in one uninterrupted line along the coast of the German sea to the mouth of the Scheld;† though the extremities of this line were very distant from each other, and the people subdivided into sections denominated Brocmans, Segelterlanders, Rustrunger, Hunsingoër, and Emlander, each people ruling its own section by its own private statutes; still they were one people, and spoke the same language, and ruled by the same common law, as a close examination of its Vetus jus Frisionum will prove. We remark that the Friesians lived close to the coast, as if allured by some magic attraction of the water; and, though when exigences required it, they sometimes extended into the interior parts, they never spread far in breadth, and even in their partial extension they soon relinquished their internal possessions. The historian, recollecting these facts, will not overlook the importance of the Friesians, though they only inhabited the borders of the continent, and the little islands by which the coast of the German ocean is covered.

* See VII. § 1, &c.

† The learned S. Turner cites six lines of Melis Stoke, in which the chronicler asserts that Lower Saxony has been confined by the Scheld. This accurate historian would not place any confidence in these words, if he had been acquainted with the following edition of the Rhymer: Rijmkronijk van Melis Stoke, met aanmerkingen door Balthazar Huydecoper, tom. iii. 8vo. Leyden, 1772; i. p. 9. The same remark is of still more forcible application on a passage of Colijn, also cited by Mr. Turner. Colijnus is a supposititious child. History of the Anglo-Saxons, i. p. 328 and 150, London, 8vo. 1828. In the history of Friesland after the time of Charlemagne, those Friesians who governed by their own laws, and spoke Friesic, must be carefully distinguished from the surrounding people, who are also called Friesians because the political division of countries refers them to Friesland. The blending of these two races has been the source of endless errors in history.

• 37. This Friesian line was early broken in two places by two mighty nations—one making its appearance from the continent, the other from the ocean.

Between the Ems and the Weser were settled the Chauci Minores, and between the Weser and the Elbe the Chauci Majores. It is reported by Tacitus, that this immense extension of land, even from the borders of Hessa, was not only under the dominion, but was inhabited by the Chauci, but, he adds, they only kept some part of the strand, leaving the Friesians for the most part in their old possessions. The Chauci, entering into alliance with other people against the declining power of Rome, and assuming the name of Franks, left this country, and their name, being absorbed in that of the Franks, disappears from historic record. The Friesians availed themselves of this opportunity to occupy the vacated possessions of the Chauci, it not being unusual for a steady people like the Friesians to make use of the changes produced by the roving disposition of their neighbours to increase their own territory.

38. Two descriptions of the Chauci are given by Tacitus. He first records some facts, and then, in the thirty-fifth chapter De Moribus Germanorum, he draws their portrait.

In the record of the facts,* the Chauci appear cruel oppressors of the feeble, vindictive pirates, and to be prone to foreign military expedition, and also to make inroads on their neighbours. In delineating their character,† it is said that they wish to support their grandeur by justice, being free from covetousness, masters of themselves, calm, modest, and retired. They never excite wars, nor harass their neighbours by predatory excursions or highway robbery. It is deemed the strongest proof of their bravery and might, that they act as superiors, and never pursue anything by injustice. Nevertheless, every one is ready to take up arms, and, in case of exigency, to unite in forming an army. They have plenty of men and horses, and their placitude detracts nothing from their valour. Had Tacitus first given this description, and afterwards recorded the facts, one might have supposed that he was misled through ignorance of the facts; but how he could contradict known facts related by himself, is hardly to be conceived. It must be clear to all who know the Friesians and their disposition, that the character ascribed to the Chauci agrees even in the least particulars with that of the Friesians. Is it then impossible that Tacitus at a distant period, and misled by later reports, should blend two neighbouring people together, and attribute to the Chauci what was alone applicable to the Friesians?

39. The line of the Friesian tribes was broken again in a second place, to the north of the Elbe.

The Saxons, occupying only some islands, such as Nordstrand, and some points on the continent to the westward and south of the Angles, and their western neighbours the strand Friesians, were in time so increased that they descended from their narrow abodes, and spread along the northern banks of the Elbe, and filled up the whole extent of country between this river and the land of the Angles.* This second breach, being near and enlarging that of the Chauci, was never entirely filled up again; and where it was afterwards, either by the departure of the Chauci, or the expeditions of the Saxons, the bishops of Bremen and Hamburg determined, by their power and spiritual influence, to destroy the Friesic spirit of freedom, by subjugating the Friesians to their sway in government, religion, and language.

40. Hence two divisions of Friesland originated at an early date: the southern part began at the mouth of the Weser, and terminated at the mouth of the Scheld; the northern part from the west strand of Schleswig [Sleswick], towards the mouth of the Elbe, much less than the southern part, and for this reason called Friesland Minor. In the 13th century, this small territory had power to raise for the king of Denmark an army of sixty thousand men.†

41. The Moeso-Goths are traced to their first position in the northern parts of Chersonesus Cimbricus [Jutland, Denmark]; the Angles in the narrower part and to the banks of the Eider; the Friesians extended on the sea-coasts by the side of the Angles to the mouth of the Elbe. We intend to place our philological comparison in the same order; first the Gothic, then the Anglo-Saxon, and finally the Friesic.

42. It must not be overlooked, that the geographical position of the whole Germanic race coincides with the arrangement of the preceding table of their languages. Going from the Baltic to the Netherlands, you pass through the original seats of the Icelandic, Moeso-Gothic, Westphalian, Netherlandish; on the left you find the Angles and Friesians; and on the right you have the Alemannic or Theotisc race.‡

43. This position may, perhaps, afford some idea of the order in which the respective tribes marched from the orient to the west of Europe.

The foremost were the Anglo-Friesic race, who, being pushed forward by following tribes, did not halt till they arrived on the shore of the German ocean. The Goths with their attendants followed, and the train of the Germani was closed by the Theotisc race. The coast of the German ocean, along which the Anglo-Friesic race was forced to spread itself, was the basis of the direction in which the two following races took their position, and were placed nearly in three parallels from north-east to south-west. These parallels are crossed and disturbed in a thousand ways by migrations and wars, but their general direction manifests itself to this very day in the remnants of the respective old languages.

44. The adventurers who subdued Britain are called Anglo-Saxons; but here an important question arises—what is implied in this name? First, it is to be observed, that this people never called themselves Anglo-

* As the Saxons were unknown to Tacitus, the irruption of the Chauci was, of course, anterior to that of the Saxons.

Saxons; but this name is given them by historians. Paulus Diaconus called them Angli-Saxones;* Codoaldus, rex Anglonum-Saxonum;† and, inverting the construction of the words, he says, Hermelinda ex Saxonum-Anglorum genere.‡ They did not call themselves by these compound names, but indiscriminately, Angles or Saxons. Anglorum, sive Saxonum gens.|| The case seems to me as follows.

45. After the Goths had evacuated the Chersonesus Cimbricus, and left only their name to the country, colonies of the neighbouring Angles succeeded in their place, and assumed the name of the Country Geatas, Eotas, Ytas.

The Scandinavians, and more particularly the Danes, were quite distinct from these Juths,§ being their mortal enemies, and being distinguished from them by some strong features in the respective languages. Neither did the Danes originally possess any part of the Chersonesus Cimbricus, unless it was the very northern point. In later ages they succeeded in gradually subduing the population of the Chersonesus, and mingling their language with that of the innates; but this very mixture proves by its ingredients, now visible, that nearly the whole peninsula was before populated by a race different to the Danes, and similar to the Angles. The definite article the, both in Danish and Icelandic, is placed after the noun and made to coalesce with it, while in the Anglo-Saxon and the kindred tongues it is always set before the noun: thus A.-S. seo stræt the street; Icel. strætít; A.-S. se strand the strand; Icel. ströndin; A.-S. se man the man; Dan. manden, gen. mandens of the man.¶ This peculiarity of the Danish idiom is not to be found in the dialect of the Jutes, however Danish it may be. If you draw a line from Skanderburg to Wiburg, and to the gulph of Lüim, what lies south and west of this line, Thysted not excepted, retains still the remains of its Anglo-Saxon, or rather its antiscandinavian origin.**

46. The combined power of the Angles and Jutes was easily overcome by that of their southern neighbours; for such was the number, the power, and the extent of the Saxons along and above the northern banks of the Elbe, that all the surrounding people, whether Friesians, Angles, or Jutes, were considered by foreigners as subdivisions of the Saxons; even what was effected by a union of all these tribes, was often ascribed to the Saxons alone.

It is likely that the Saxons were the most prominent, and therefore attracted the greatest attention from southern scholars, while the Friesians, Angles, and Jutes were less observed on the strand or the inner part of the peninsula. It is known, from their geographical position, that the Angles constituted a part, and being the chief actors, probably a great part of the migrating allies; so that, on their departure, their native soil was left nearly destitute of inhabitants.†† The Angles, however, were considered a subdivision of the more powerful Saxons, and took a share in their expedition: this union is correctly expressed in the denomination Anglo-Saxons. For, whether this word be considered as German or Latin, the first part denotes the species, and the second the genus, and the whole implies the tribe of the Angles belonging to the Saxon confederacy. The Angles bore the chief and leading part in the expedition to Britain, though considered as only a part of the Saxon confederacy, and therefore denominated Anglo-Saxon.* Time has done justice to the Angles; for while the name of Saxons has either completely disappeared, or has only a faint vestige in such words as Essex, (East-Saxons), Middlesex, &c., the name of the Angles is still embodied in England and Englishmen, and is in full vigour and known from pole to pole; nor will it ever die, unless the declining empires of Germanic race should be washed away by a flood of barbarians, as the Roman empire was by the Germanic.

47. It has already been shown that Anglo-Saxon is a word formed by old Latin authors, and not by the Saxons themselves. Independently of historical proof, the foreign descent of the word is proved by its formation.

Thus we say, in the Latin form, Anglo-Saxones, Hiberno-Anglus, Polono-Russus, whether we take Anglo, Hiberno, Polono, for substantives or adverbs; but in expressing these words in the Germanic tongues, we should say English Saxon, Polish Russian; in German, Englischer Sachse, Russischer Pole. Thus the Dutch poet Maerlant, Dus werden heren dingelsche sasssen, Thus the English Saxons turned rulers. (iii. 29.) This Germanic form is verbally translated by Paulus Diaconus, (iv. 15,) Angli-Saxones.

48. It is often stated that the word Seaxan Saxons is derived from seax a sword; in East Friesland, saeghs a little sabre.

If this be true, there is some reason for the supposition that the kindred nations derived their names from the weapon which they chiefly used. Thus, Franc, from franca a javelin; German, from gár jaculum; Dut. Kil. gheer fuscina; and man a man, that is, a dart man. Angle the Angles, from angel aculeus hamatus. The word seax is nothing else but Moes. ahs spica; Sans. असि asc a sword, ensis; A.-S. æchir, ear an ear; æx, eax an axe, an instrument consisting of a metal head with a sharp edge, preceded by the sibilant s; and perhaps gar is the same word as (ar) ear; Dut. aar, air, aer arista, preceded by the guttural g; Dut. Kil. anghel an ear or spike of corn—all proving the idea of something pointed. The word franca is seen in Ger. fram, properly the sharp end of an instrument, the beginning of any thing, and hence the preposition from, agreeing in signification with the Moes. fram. Fram fruma, (Moes. Jn. 15, 27), is on that account properly the edge, commencement of the beginning, that is, from the beginning. Is it not also possible that the Brondingas, (Beo. K. p. 37, 11), are so called from Icel. brandr lamina ensis.

49. In the comparison of languages, care should be taken not to be misled by mere names. The Saxons increased so much in power, as to dare to oppose the hosts of Charlemagne, and at last they occupied an immense territory about the Elbe and the Weser, which, after their name, was called Saxony. This Saxony was subsequently occupied by other

Dr. Johnson did not regard this rule, and therefore he often compares English words with the most remote German. "After cat you first find Teuton katz (read katze), then French chat, and afterwards A.-S. cat; while A.-S. cat, Frs. and Dut. kat, being the proper form of the word, ought to have stood first." Some hundred examples of this sort, and worse, may be quoted from this celebrated lexicographer: his errors, instead of being removed by his editor, Mr. Todd, are in this respect, and some others, increased: added to this, that many words are not to be found in the languages referred to. In the article hay, the Icel. hey is also said to be Dut., while the Dut. word is hooi; and thus in almost every page. An impartial judge, considering the medley of materials, the blunders, the negligence or typographical errors occurring in deducing words from their originals, will conclude, that the etymological part of Johnson's Dictionary, even in the edition of 1827, is not deserving of the expense and the labour bestowed upon it, and is quite unworthy of the nation of whose language it is the chief interpreter, if not the uncontrolled lawgiver. The English etymologist will only meet with the proper forms of its words by consulting the nearest relatives of the English language. We may illustrate this by the preceding example of hay. Here we find the same change of g to y in the Country Friesian as in the English—a change which is not to be found so often in any other Germanic tongue. A.-S. heg, in Frs. c. is hēa; but hāye (Italian a) to make hay, agrees with hay, having both a, as Moes. hawi. So also A.-S. mæg potest, dæg dies, weg via, cæg clavis, were changed into may, day, way, key, of which the Englishman will scarcely discover instances, unless he goes to his nearest kinsmen the Friesians, Frs. c. mei, dei, wei, kâi, (Italian a).†

50. It may be asked whether, when the Anglo-Saxons left their native soil, any of the neighbouring Friesians accompanied them, and whether any intercourse was subsequently maintained between the separated brethren? ‡

* It has already been observed, (§ 22,) that the question is not whether a word exists in one of the Germanic languages, which is generally the case, but whether the proper form of the word is to be found in the nearest kindred dialect. When we cannot discover it in this dialect, then only we may apply to languages of more remote relationship. The question, for instance, is not whether the word cat exists in other Germanic tongues, but whether it is found in A.-S., Frs. or Dut.

† There is another class of Germanic words introduced in this century, or the two preceding, and making no part of the original frame of the language. The correct derivation of these words depends more upon an extensive knowledge of many thousand terms in modern tongues, than upon analogical acuteness: I should wish to bestow more praise upon this part of Johnson's Dictionary, but it is not better than the other. One example will be sufficient. What can be more simple than the derivation of the word TATTOE, the beat of a drum warning soldiers to their quarters, from the Dut. taptoo, id. properly signifying tapping shut, the taps or ginshops shut from the soldiers? Even in the last edition of Johnson, by Todd, it is derived from Fr. tapotez tous.

‡ The old Chroniclers are at a loss whether to make Hengist a Friesian or a Saxon. Maerlant speaks of him thus.

Een hiet Engistus een vrieze, een sas,
Die vten lande verdreuen was;
One was named [A.-S. het] Engist, a Friesian or a Saxon,
Who was driven away out of his land.—Spiegel Historial, c. xv. p. 16.

Upon which I would remark, that the faces of the Anglo-Saxon and the Friesic languages would have the more marked and decided likeness to each other, when the separation was the most complete. If a continued intercourse between the Friesians on the continent, and the Anglo-Saxons in Britain, had been maintained, the Anglo-Saxon would have been supplied with Friesian ingredients of a later date, in such a way as languages not otherwise homogeneous may form a distant similitude; but when there are innumerable resemblances between Anglo-Saxon and the Friesian of this very day, originating in the latter part of the 5th century, without being increased by a subsequent intercourse, it is a proof that this striking similitude must have been laid in the basis of the languages. I feel much inclined to think that this is the truth, while I allow that many of the neighbouring Friesians accompanied the Anglo-Saxons in their expedition.

51. It is true that the Friesian is noted for his tenacity to his native soil. His residence about the mouths of the Ems and the Rhine for centuries before our era, in the midst of a wandering people, is a sufficient proof of this character.

The Friesians on the confines of the Angles were not of such quiet and sedentary habits as those on the Ems and the Rhine. They acquired the restless habits of their neighbours. Suppose then a portion of the Saxons, many thousand Jutes, and nearly all the Angles, leaving their country for glory and riches; would it not be a miracle, if the Friesians in the neighbourhood of the moving tribes were alone insensible of the general impulse? This is on the supposition that the movement was voluntary; but, considering the subsequent emigration of the Cimbrians, the Goths, and Angles, from the same peninsula, I cannot help retaining the supposition, that some cause, now unknown, might operate to produce these migrations. This cause, whether famine,* or inroads from the Scandinavians, being general, would have the same influence upon the Friesians as upon their neighbours.

52. I am aware that inquiry will be made, why Bede, in enumerating the tribes who peopled Britain, omitted the Friesians.†

As well may we inquire why Procopius omits the Saxons, and names the Friesians. Bede was born about A.D. 673, and died in 735. Though he was well

The Chronicle of Maerlant is founded upon the Speculum Historiale of Monk Vincentius, who wrote about A. D. 1245.

* Nennius says, that the first settlers arrived in three vessels, and that Hengist and Horsa were exiles: this intimates some internal combustion in Gothland. In those nations averse to the sedentary occupation of agriculture, famine was always the most efficient and general cause of emigration. This was at least the case with the Scandinavians, who, pressed by dearth, determined by lot who should emigrate. It is likely that the Scandinavians fell upon the Jutes, who, being settled in the corner of the peninsula, were the first prey of the hungry invaders. The Jutes fell upon Britain, and were the first Saxon settlers in Kent and Wight. The Scandinavians then descended further to the south on the Angles and Saxons, and induced the tribes to comply with the request of Hengist and other leaders to come to Britain. The northern pirates, still descending further, ravaged the whole coast of the German sea: the Friesians were, therefore, the never-ceasing objects of their piratical incursions. In still later times they settled in France, and ultimately reached the descendants of the same tribes of the Anglo-Saxons, who, in the two preceding centuries, were exiled from their native soil. See on this subject, *Normannernes søtoge og deres nedsættelse i Frankerig Historik Fremstillet af G. B. Depping med adskillige forandringer oversat af N. M. acquainted with the affairs of England in his time, he never left his native land. Procopius was a Greek of Cæsarea, and after the year 535 the secretary of Belisarius, the companion of his general in his expeditions against the Vandals and Goths, and of course well acquainted with the general circumstances and relations of the Germanic tribes. He was also two hundred years nearer the Saxon expedition to Britain than Bede. This Procopius states in his fourth book on the Gothic war, that Britain was peopled by three nations, the Britons, the Angles, and the Friesians, Ἀγγιλοι καὶ Φρισσῶνες. Could Procopius be mistaken or mislead in an historical fact of such notoriety as the overthrow of an important island by swarms from the continent, an event in which the political interests of his master Justinian, as to the influence of its example, were highly concerned? It was to Procopius a comparatively recent event, happening about 449, and therefore only about a hundred years before he wrote his history. If he were mislead, how is it that he does not mention some nation of wider fame, and is satisfied to select the Angles and the remote tribe of the Friesians to be the inhabitants of Britain?

53. I cannot omit to mention, that the leaders of the Anglo-Saxons bear names which are now in use by the Friesians, though by time a little altered or abbreviated.

They have Hortse, Hengst,* Witte, Wiggele, Eske, Tsjisse, Tsjerk, Ealse, Hessel; for A.-S. Horsa, Hengest, Witta, Wihtgil, Chr. Ing. p. 15; Æsc. Cissa, Chr. Ing. p. 16; Cerdic, Elesa, Chr. Ing. p. 17. Also Lense, Timen, Elle, for A.-S. Wlencing, Cymen, Ælle, [Icel. at ellda ignem facere; A.-S. ellen virtus, robur,] Chr. Ing. 16; Ine, Ide, Offe, for A.-S. Ine, Ide, Offa. There are indeed but few A.-S. names which may not be found in use with the present Friesians.

54. The story of Geoffrey of Monmouth about Vortigern and Rouin, or Rowen, daughter of Hengist, is known. She welcomed him with, "Lauerd king, wacht heil," Lord king, wait for my hailing draught. He, by the help of an interpreter, answered, "Drinc heil," Drink hail to me.†

I intend not to discuss the verity of the history, but only to allude to the ceremony which was observed. The Friesian Chronicles represent Rowen as drinking the whole, in compliance with the royal command, "Drink hail!" and then taking the right hand of the king in hers and kissing him, while she offered him the cup with her left hand. This is quite a Friesian custom.‡ The female is not named Rouin by the Friesian Chronicle, as the text of Geoffrey badly states, but Ronixa, a name still in use with us, though, by an analogical permutation of consonants, it is written Reonts.

The maiden's taking hold of the king's hand and kissing him, is reported by Winsemius Frieschi Historien, p. 43, and others, who may be compared with Geoffrey of Monmouth. See Junii Etymol. Anglic. in voce WAIT.

55. Whatever may be the truth of the story, it is most certain that “Wacht hail” is changed into Wassail; that wassail-cup is sometimes used at feasts and on New-year’s day in England; and that its origin is traced back to the supposed meeting of Vortigern and Ronixa.

What has particularly struck me is, that the figure of the old English wassail-bowl is exactly the same as the silver cups in which, at weddings, the Friesians offer to the guests brandy with raisins, [spicy wassel-bowl]. This cup passes from the married couple to their guests on their left-hand, and from them to their left-hand neighbour, as in the corporation festivals in England. The liquor is called in the Friesian tongue, “breid’s trienen” bride’s tears, alluding to her reluctant willingness to enter into wedlock.

56. I will only add that the Danes were the common enemies of the Friesians and Angles, and as much opposed by national hatred, as the Friesians and Angles were united by the ties of national sympathy.

The Saxon Chronicle records, in the year A.D. 897, that the Friesians and Angles fought under the command of king Alfred against the Danes, who were defeated near Exmouth, Devonshire. The Friesians were of some repute, or the names of three of them would not have been preserved from oblivion in this record: Æbbe, Frs. c. Ebbe; Æðelere, Frs. c. Eldert; Wulfheard, Frs. c. Olfert. Were these Friesians the allies of Alfred, recently come to his assistance from the banks of the Elbe or Rhine, or his subjects settled in England?

Before entering upon the comparison of the Friesic with the Anglo-Saxon, it will be necessary to form accurate ideas about the state in which the Anglo-Saxon language has reached our time.

57. One common fate accompanied all the MSS. of the middle ages, that the text was modernised, and therefore spoiled when copied by a person who spoke the same language, and nothing but the ignorance of the scribe could give security from this perversion. Not understanding the MS. he was compelled to copy literally, and his errors, whether arising from inadvertence or the indistinctness of the old letters, are easily rectified by the critic. The fact is, that the copyist, considering the words only as a vehicle of the sense, did not care about the language. Every scribe, therefore, changed the language of his MS. into the dialect of his own time and dwelling-place.

In this way the Roman du Renard,* which can be traced to the time between the first and second crusade, is come down to us in the language of the 13th century, A.D. 1288, 1290, 1292. It is on this account that Mr. Roberts observes—“Avant l’invention de l’imprimerie le style ne conduisit qu’imparfaitement à reconnoître la différence des temps. Les copistes ne se bornoient pas à transcrire ; ils corrigeoient l' orthographe substituoient des vers nouveaux à ceux qu' ils avoient sous les yeux, et des expressions nouvelles à celles qui tomboient si rapidement en désuétude. La langue, qui changeoit d' un jour à l' autre devoit les engager à multiplier ces altérations que le peu de sévérité de l' art poétique rendoit alors si faciles."* The scribe, however, found some restraint in the alliteration, which was observed by Cædmon and other poets. In those MSS. where there was little except the rhyme to indicate the mechanism of the verses, or where the MS. was in prose, the scribe had more liberty to change. This was the fate of the oldest Dutch poet, Maerlant. Some leaves of parchment containing fragments of his Spiegel Historial, much older than the MS. from which the edition of 1785 was printed, afford conclusive evidence, that neither the construction of the words, nor the manner of spelling in the MS. used in printing this edition, was that of Maerlant himself. Therefore, the question about language during the middle ages, is reduced to the question of the time and place of the MS.

* Le Roman du Renart public, par M. D. M. Méon, Paris, 1826. This poem was the basis of a poem in the language of Flanders, van den Vos Reynaerde, A.D. 1404. This was followed by the Dutch Renard in prose, Gouda, 1479, and this again by the renowned Reincke de Vos of Henri van Alkmar, Lubek, 1498, the parent of all later European versions. Caxton’s folio edition of 1481, was a translation of the work published at Gouda. To the researches of recent scholars, we owe Reinardus Vulpes, carmen epicum seculis IX. et XII. conscriptum: ad fidem codd. MSS. ed. et annotationibus illustravit, Fr. Jas. Mone, editio princeps, 8vo. pp. 336. It is proved by comparison, that this Latin poem has given rise to the very Roman du Renart, published by Mr. Méon, and also that the author was an inhabitant of the Belgic Netherlands, to the localities of which, allusion is often made. See VI. § 13—17.

58. The same fate attended the most ancient pieces of Anglo-Saxon poetry, not to speak of prose. Let me exemplify my assertions by the poems of Cædmon. The MS. of the Cædmon on which Mr. Thorpe founds his text, is apparently of the 10th century, and it strictly expresses the language of that period. Cædmon, the author of the poem, died about A.D. 680. He was first a cowherd at Whitby, and afterwards became a monk. Would it not be a little strange to assert, that a man brought up in his station of life, especially in the uncivilized northern parts of England, and in the 7th century, has spoken the same dialect as the far more civilized inhabitants of southern England two centuries later? This too in an age, when some parts of England had as little communication with each other, as with foreign countries. In this case, Anglo-Saxon would be an exception in the history of languages ; it would be without dialect, time, and place, having produced no change in its forms. How far an assertion of this sort is distant from truth, is proved by the oldest remnant of Anglo-Saxon poetry now extant, compared with its appearance two and three centuries later. In a codex referred by Wanley to A.D. 737,† we read a few lines of Cædmon which are translated into Latin by Bede,‡ and we have the same lines as they are modernized by Alfred in his Anglo-Saxon version of Bede, about two hundred years after Cædmon. Let us compare these two specimens with each other :—

Whether the reference of the MS. Epis. Norwicensis to the precise year, A.D. 737, be correct or not, every one will agree with Wanley, that it is far before the age of Alfred,† and is by no means a re-translation of the Latin words of Bede. King Alfred strictly follows the lines and the words of the MS. Epis. Norwicensis. The observation of Bede,‡ that he followed the sense of Cædmon, and not the construction of his words, applies particularly to the latter part of the MS. Epis. Norwicensis, and is an additional proof that Bede found his original almost in the same form as it is presented to us in MS. Epis. Norwicensis. Alfred seems convinced that he had the true song of Cædmon before him, as in his Anglo-Saxon translation, he not only omits Bede's remark about giving merely the sense, and not the same collocation of words, but immediately before the insertion of this Anglo-Saxon song, he asserts, "þara endebyrdnes þis is" the order of which is this.§

The MS. named by Wanley in note [† p. lvi.] described in his Catalogue as Cod. MSS. Episcopi Norwicensis, p. 288, is the same as that mentioned by Smith in this note. Dr. John Moore was bishop of Norwich when Wanley made his Catalogue; he was afterwards bishop of Ely; after his death, king George the First purchased this MS. with the Doctor's library, which he presented to the University of Cambridge, where the MS. is now preserved in the Public Library.—J. § Bede Sm. p. 597, 19, and just afterwards, l. 26, adds, "And þam wordum sona monig word in þæt ylce gemet, Gode wyrðes songes togeþeodde," and to those words soon joined many words of song worthy of God, IN THE SAME MEASURE.—J. B.

59. Having here the same words written in different ages, it is my intention to notice the discrepancies, that the changes the language underwent in the interval may be clearly seen.

60. In the MS. Episc. Norwicensis, we find no characters for þ and p, the one being designated by u, the other by d, as in gidanc, or by th, as in tha for þa. In the same MS. casula is translated hearth for hearð. Hence may it not be inferred, that the þ and p were introduced later than the date of the MS.? Or was the þ a letter of the heathen Runic alphabet, and for that reason was not admitted amongst the letters of the holy Roman church?

61. The æ is divided into its compounds a and e, as in hefaen, ricaes, in which a long a seems to be implied. Mr. Thorpe, in his second edition, p. 22, follows neither Wanley nor Smith, having hefæn, metudaes, for hefaen, metudæs; but in this, Smith also differs from Wanley, who puts mæcti for Smith's maecti.

62. The c, when it had the sound of ch was not yet changed into h, as in mæcti, drictin; but in later times became mihte, dryhten.

63. We find here two forms of heaven, the one written with b, and the other with f, hefaen ricaes and heben;* and in the Vetus Jus Frisicum, which is about four centuries older than the oldest laws written in Friesic, we have (Tit. iii.) thivbda for thiaftha, when the inscription is not from the hand of any Francic-Theotisc lawyer under Charlemagne.

64. The resolving of a into æ was not yet accomplished, we have fadur for fæder; Frs. feder, Asg. bk. 2, Ch. I. 389, 475, 612, contracted, Frs. h. feer.

65. The g in the termination of the infinitive had not yet undergone any change; hergan celebrare was changed by Alfred into herian, and to supply the hiatus, replaced the g, and changed a into ea, making herigeaen.

66. The a was already changed into e, where the more modern A.-S. still retains the a, as in end, sue, scepen, for and, swa, scapen. This was, perhaps, something peculiar to the Northumbrian dialect, agreeing with the Friesic in scepene clather made clothes, (Asg. bk. 84), but not in and and, (Asg. bk. 1); nor in Old Frs. and Frs. v. sa thus. Later in the Frs. l. we find ende like the above. They probably pronounced the words thus, éand, suéa, scéapen.

67. The a changed into e was not yet gone into i, as mectig, but at a later period mihtig; with æ, as in mæcti later mihte. Heliand has hêlag holy, MS. Episc. Norwicensis haleg, not yet halig; on the contrary, Heliand mahtig, and of course MS. Episc. Norwicensis mectig. It further appears, from the exchange of e for æ, that æ had nearly the sound of e, and of course like the Fr. ai. In terminations we find also æ used for e.

68. The vowel has undergone a different change in the enclytic gi. Moes. ga produces the usual A.-S. ge, when pronounced broad and like a diphthong, ge becomes gi; as, gidanc, gihuaes, for geþonc, gehwæs.

69. The vowel in the terminations of words and in all syllables unaccented, is sounded as indistinctly as the short ě or Heb. sheva [ : ]. It is a proof that a dialect has some antiquity, when these unaccented syllables have not entirely lost a distinguishing feature. The MS. Episc. Norwicensis has ricaes, metudæs, astelidæ, moncynnæs, tiadæ, for rices, metudes, astelide, moncynnnes, tiade; and mæcti, drictin, for mæcte, dricten.

70. It is a principle in English pronunciation, that the vowel before r in terminations takes the sound of u, [Walker's Pron. Dict. § 98, 418]. In MS. Episc. Nor- ricensis we have, uuldur, fadur, for uuldor, fader. Before n the a is also changed into u, as fold- or foldun, middun, for foldan, middan.

71. The a was not yet resolved into ea, as ward, barnum, for wéard, béarnum; nor the o into eo, as scôp [Old. Dut. schóep; Ger. gaskop creabat] for gescéop agreeing with the present Dut. schiep.

72. The e, which has its origin in i, and was afterwards changed into eo, remained unaltered in heben, hefaen for heofon. It seems that eo has produced o in -fon, in the same manner as æ proceeded from e, and affords an instance of some assimilation of vowels in two succeeding syllables. I must add, however, that it is questionable whether the vowel of the latter syllable operates upon that of the former, or the former upon that of the latter. If the vowel of the former syllable depend upon that of the latter, then -fæn and -fon were changed before he- and héo-; but if the latter upon that of the former, then he- and heo- before -fæn and -fon. I do not lay much stress upon this observation, as languages in their most ancient state have not this kind of assimilation; it seems, however, to rest in the mind on the same foundation as alliteration, both being a feeling for rhythm. For whatever may be the assimilation of one syllable to another in the same word, the same relation one word has to another in two successive lines of poetry. This assimilation of vowels is called by German grammarians umlaut.

73. The ia being proper to the old Westphalian and Zelandic, undergo no change in tiadæ; the i being changed into e, the a ought to follow the impulse and pass to o, and make teode from teon producere; to hape tiath in unum conveniunt, Asg. bk. 335; tya ducere, Em. l. 88; tioda ducebat; Icel. tiadi, id. The Moes. tiuhan ducere; tauch ducebat; hence the Frs. v. teach, taech, Frs. l. 79, 81: but there was once an Old Frs. imperfect tiade, as the Dut. tijde.

74. So i had not yet passed to e, nor u to o, in metudæs, later metodes.

75. The imperfect astelidæ was not yet contracted to astealde.

76. It is clear that the earliest languages consisted of single words, and that two separate ideas were expressed by two separate words; but, by being constantly used together, at last united in one idea and one word. The adjective, in this process, passing from adjectives, separately existing, to the first and specifying component of the word, loses the adjective termination, by doubling its accent on the principal vowel, and looks like an adverb or preposition compounded with a word.

Thus, on ealddagum olim, originally on ealdum dagum olim; Dut. eertyds, originally eeres tijds in former times. Dut. oudvader; Ger. altvater a patriarch, formerly oude vader, and alte vater. In the MS. Episc. Norwic. we meet with an instance in which the meaning of such a compound appears, but the grammatical form is not yet developed. The compound aelda barnum appears as two words, yet aelda is not in the dat. as it ought to be when separate, and it only requires the process of time to become one word aeldbarnum, the same as Ger. altvater. Aelda barnum does not signify antiquis liberis, but children of old; and thus it has the whole meaning of the compound, but only half its grammatical form. Alfred, finding the phrase a little antiquated, used eorðan bearnum filiis terræ. There could be no objection to the form, because, in Alfred's time, ealda-fæder, ealde-moder, and ealde-wita, were sometimes used for ealdfæder avus, ealdmoder avia, ealdwita senior ecclesiæ.

77. The pronoun þe was omitted before scylun we must, precisely as the Moes. skulum debemus, Lk. xviii. 1.

78. In this word the u had not yet been changed into eo. From Moes. skulum was derived A.-S. scylun, the more modern scéolon.

79. As a had not yet gone over into éa, or o into éo, or e into éo, so also e had not yet been changed into ea: thus we find astelidæ for astéalde.

80. This comparison affords a few important deductions. As there appears to be no mixture of the dialect of the Northmen, the MS. must be of a date anterior to their conquest of Northumberland, which agrees with the statements of Wanley.

81. In it we find also many analogies with cognate languages not apparent in the writings of Alfred, and this affords a further proof of the antiquity of the MS.; for we have already observed, that the resemblance of languages is greater in proportion to their age, and, on the other hand, that dialect differs most which has most diverged from the parent stock.*

82. The development of the diphthongs ea and eo from simple vowels, was the result of nearly two centuries between the date of the MS. Episc. Norwic. and the time of Alfred; for no one, I believe, will pretend that the simple vowel in these instances was a dialectic variation peculiar to Northumberland, as these diphthongs are still distinctly pronounced there, like death in Yorkshire. The diphthong was of course developed in the north, as well as in the south of England. If we now go back still further, from the time of the MS. Episc. Norwic. to the descent of the Anglo-Saxons on Britain, [from 737 to 449,] and if we suppose that during this period the cognate languages approached nearer to the A.-S. in the same proportion as they did from Alfred to Cædmon, then indeed we have a clear conception how all these tribes of Jutes, Angles, Saxons, and Friesians, whose languages some centuries later were quite unintelligible to one another, could, at their departure from their native shores to Britain, as men of one speech, unite in council and action.

83. This comparison implies further, that the peculiarities by which the A.-S. is distinguished, relate to the state in which this tongue has come down to us.

84. I have nothing more to add about the Mœso-Gothic, to what I stated in the fourteenth and fifteenth paragraphs. The peculiar character of the A.-S., as distinguished from the Mœso-Gothic, would for the most part be removed, if we could trace the A.-S. to the time of the Mœso-Gothic, about the middle of the 4th century. The means of comparison are greatly increased by the exertions of Angelo Mai, Count Castiglione and Massmann.† The stores within the reach of Junius were exhausted by him, for comparison with the A.-S. in almost every word of his Glossarium Gothicum, in many articles of his Etymologicon Anglicanum, and in his other Dictionaries, still sleeping, to the common shame of the English and Friesians, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. The first that made a classification and comparison of the Gothic languages was Lambert ten Kate, a Dutchman. The foundation laid by him has more recently been greatly extended by the unwearied toil of Rask and Grimm. I need not boast that I have done the same, for it requires no genius—the labour is purely mechanical. Some will present you with the oldest form of a word, but this is not right, when it has to be compared with a subsequent and more advanced development. For my part, I shall not hesitate to avail myself of the labours of my predecessors, and to cite parallel words in different cases and times, when I think it does not affect the vowel or consonant to be compared.

85. I do not know any A.-S. scholar, who has instituted a comparison between the Anglo-Saxon and Friesic so minute as their near relationship claims. Some did not see the force of the comparison, and all wanted materials. A brief account of the materials I have used may not be uninteresting.

86. The Asega-bôk,* the book of the judge, contains the laws of the Rustringian Friesians located around the gulf of the Jade, as far as the southern banks of the Weser. Its date may be about A.D. 1212-1250.

This most remarkable monument of Friesian antiquity is published in the Verhandelingen van het genootschap pro excolendo jure patrio, tom. ii. Groningen, 1778, but in a manner so negligent, that I deem it matter of great danger for a critic to cite words from this edition. I, however, entertain the pleasing hope, that this defect will soon be redressed by one of my friends, who intends to publish a second edition, founded on an excellent codex within our reach, as soon as the literary public feel inclined to defray the costs of the press.

observed in several parts of the country of Friesland, forming a part of the present kingdom of the Netherlands. This piece is of A.D. 1276, and published in the Groot placaat en Charterboek van Vriesland, tom. i. p. 97, together with a great many little records of latter times in the Friesian tongue.

91. The most complete system of Friesian laws,* though of a more recent date than the foregoing, is contained in the Old Friesian Laws, published by two eminent Friesian lawyers, P. Wierdsma and Brantsma, whose commentary bears witness to the depth and extent of their erudition. The laws in this collection, as well as those found in the Charterboek, had force chiefly within the limits of the country of Friesland in the Netherlands.

92. To the same country belongs also the collection of charters dispersed in the history of its capital Leeuwarden, by Gabbema.† They are all of a recent date, when the Friesic was about to be disused in public charters. In the enumeration of these laws and records, I have descended from the north to the south, beginning at the Wezer and ending at Old Friesland, situate at the mouth of the Rhine. But let us now ascend still higher, beginning with the Friesians conterminous with the Angles.

93. Friesic is still spoken in a tract of country bordering the coast of the German sea, in the district of Bredsted, dutchy of Schleswig. It is strongly tainted with Danish; but a corn-merchant of my native village, [Friesland, part of the Netherlands,] on going there to buy rapeseed, was not a little surprised that he and the peasants could understand each other in their respective mother-tongues. The late Reverend N. Outzen has left a glossary of the Friesic dialect, which for some years has been in the press, at the expense of the Royal Society of Copenhagen. The first eighty-eight pages, which were intended for me by my friend the late Professor Rask, and sent to me through the courteous attention of Professor Rafn, have fully convinced me of the identity of this dialect with the other branches of the Friesic.

94. Of the language of the Ditmarsian Friesians, and those living between the Elbe and Wezer, nothing remains. Their long and obstinate struggle against the aggressions of the Danish kings, Bremish bishops, or dukes of Oldenburg,‡ terminating with the extinction of their liberty and language, has long since effaced the last trace of the Friesian tongue and nationality, and destroyed the MSS. of their ancient laws.

95. A more lucky fate was allotted to the land between the Wezer and

This is the twentieth landright (law).
 When any Northman leaps on the land (shore), and he takes a man, and binds and leads (him) out of the land, and brings (him) after (wards) to the land (ashore) and forces him to this, that he burns houses and violates wives, and slays men and burns
 God's houses, and what he may do to harm,
 (A.-S. laðe.) When he then flees away or is loosed, and again comes to land, and his lede<sup>b</sup> (is restored to his land and kindred). If then the court of justice of the people will seek him (prosecute him), and his relations intend to charge him with the horrible murder which he has ere (formerly) framed (committed) with the pirates; he may then go (appear) before the court, and he may tell (con- fess) known and proved facts; he ought then to swear an oath by the saints, that he did it all by need (force), as his lord bade him, because he was a man not wielding his life (body) and members.
 In this case, neither the lede (people), nor the king's attorney, nor his relations, are allowed to seek him (harass him) with fetters, through (because) that the attorney might not (was unable) to secure him his safety. The servant should do as his lord bade him through will of the life (for the sake of his life).

<sup>c</sup> ginte Wiarda translates yonder. I deem it to be horrible, tremendous murder, which agrees with the Low-Saxon version of the Asega-bók, which has great, enormous murder. This word is connected with A.-S. ginian, of course yawning, enormously vast, horrible. In this way the English adj. huge vast, great even to deformity, explains the meaning of Icel. ugr terror, whence ugly; of A.-S. oge, whence Frs. v. [ouw-lik] onjouwlik horrible, all derived from the idea of wide vastness, still apparent in Moes. auhn, Swed. ogn, ugn.

<sup>d</sup> A.-S. wicing pirata. The c by the Friesic and English being changed into tsh, wicing becomes witsing. Thus A.-S. cerene, Frs. v. tsher'ne or tsjerne, Eng. churn. Sometimes the Frs. v. retains both forms with some shade of the signification: Frs. v. kâtje to talk, but tjatterje to chat, chatter. From A.-S. cidan, properly to make a noise as an inharmonious bird, and hence to quarrel, the Frs. v. has only tsjitte to make a noise as quarrelling sparrows and women. The original signification, now lost in English, was very well known in the old English. "The swaloves chyterid and songe."—Golden Legend, I. 493. Frs. v. De swéalen tsjittene in songen.—It is dubious whether wicing is to be derived from wic-cing sinus vel ripe uade insidiabantur pirata, rez, or from wig-cing the king of slaughter.

<sup>e</sup> A.-S. fremad. Wiarda not knowing this Anglo-Saxon word, deems efrenuth to be spurious; for this word does not occur elsewhere. This instance may teach us how easily the most difficult words are explained in Anglo-Saxon and Friesic, when aided by each other.

96. Let it be remarked, that the u having the power of ou in Fr. doux, or Eng. cube, is changed by the Frs. v. into o; undfliuch, unweldich, mucht, truch, gunga, are now pronounced ontflyucht, onweldich, mocht, troch, gonge.

Brocmen choose (made) this to a statute, that there no borough (castle) and wall, and no high house of stone must be by (the mulct) of eight marks: and whatsoever rede-giver (counsel, judge) hinders not this, and after (being built) lays not (pulls) down, he may atone for it with eight marks, and with the house with (the) lede (people), unless he clears himself. And turns (builds) any man higher than twelve earth-feet (a measure) high to the roof, and who will (intends to) make a cellar, he must not make over (above) two stories. If he will (intends) to the roof and makes any (thing), otherwise let him atone for it with eight marks, who works otherwise.

And the new judges shall accept it after the former (judges) have proclaimed the peace (this statute for the public security) by the mulct mentioned. Let stone-

98. From this example it may be seen that the text is corrupt, and cannot be cited without employing some criticism. It suffices, however, to show the extreme jealousy of a free people for their liberty, so as even not to allow the building of a house of stone, or of more than two stories above a cellar, that the possessor might not thence annoy his countrymen, and use his house as an instrument of tyranny. Building their churches alone of stone, they fortified them at the same time, together with the surrounding parishes; and this forming a single connected stronghold, they retired there after the loss of a battle, and defended at the same moment the two dearest possessions of mankind, their liberty and their altars, against the insults of oppression. It is for this reason that Friesland does not offer any ruins of castles of the middle age to the eye of the antiquary, which are of so frequent occurrence on the borders of the Rhine and almost in every part of Europe. They still retain their ground, name, language and national character, the only remnant of Friesian antiquity unknown to the travelling antiquary, whose eyes are attracted by the more glaring objects of old walls, palaces, tombs, and castles. It is most likely that we are indebted to these statutes for the absence of any vaulted cellar in Friesland. What castles there are, owe their origin to the fatal internal wars of the Schieringers and Vetkopers in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Friesians, however, stood not in want of cellars as they do not like any salted vegetables, or vegetables at all; flour, peas and beans, salted meat in the winter, and some fresh in summer, being their ordinary food, they do not lay up any provisions. I speak from the experience of my own childhood, when every one, in winter as well as summer, daily bought what he wanted, and a single cellar was amongst the curiosities of the village and its neighbourhood.

This is the tenth statute, that the Friesians need not follow a campaign further eastward than to the Weser, and westward to the Flie; that they may hold their land against the sea, and against the host of the heathens (Northmen). Then king Charles bade that they should fare (follow) the campaign further eastward to Hitsakker, and westward to Sinkfal. <sup>g</sup> Likewise scria to weep, from Icel. kria quæri; Icel. at krita minurire, or rather from to cry, also to scream: Frs. v. scrieme to weep, from A.-S. breman.

<sup>i</sup> The root hle and le exists in A.-S. hligan: þe þec men hligað which incline thee to man; where the reading of hnigað for hligað is to no purpose at all, Cd. 235, 25, Ed. Thorpe. The Icelanders have the same root in their hlickr obliquitas, curvamen. To this is perhaps also related A.-S. ligan, (inclinare) cubare, jacere, (tegere) mentiri. Moes. hliga tabernaculum, shows that the aspiration originally belonged to Moes. ligan jacere. The other form, Moes. laugnjan, nearly equivalent to Goth. liugan (tegere) mentiri et uxorem ducere, whence A.-S. leogan to lie, signifies to hide and to deny, in which the same transition of the sense is observable. In the same manner, A.-S. pacian tegere, and Moes. Gott. thahan tacere.

The second form is furnished with a d in Icel. at hlída inclinare, cedere, obedire, from Icel. hlíd devexitas vel latus montis, whence also Dan. en fjeldlie. Lida, besides the h, takes also s and g in to slide and to glide, per deveza labi. To cover by inclining, hence A.-S. hlíd covering, potlid; Ems. Land. 8, 82, hlíd eyelid; Frs. v. éachlid, lid potlid; Icel. hlíd ostium, porta (the cover of the entrance). The Goths had likewise this form in their hleithva a tent.

I return to le without a final consonant, A.-S. hleo covering, shelter, refuge; Ab. 86, place sheltered from the wind. The lee side, Dut. de lij (a sea term) the side of the ship not exposed to the wind. As the sailor must determine the situation of surrounding objects from the relative position of his vessel, the coast opposite to his lee-side is called by him the lee-shore, though it is the shore towards which the wind blows, and necessarily must blow. The sailor does not regard the position of the shore as to the wind, but as to the sides of his vessel, and lee in this phrase denotes too, calm, quiet. I was induced to make these remarks to silence an objection of Dr. Jamieson, who concludes, from the signification of lee-shore, that lee, Scot. le, cannot be sheltered from the wind, and derives the word from Icel. lá, lea. See Todd's Johnson in loco, Jamieson in loco.

wintry fog-cold, that he so deep and dim (dark) is locked up and covered under the oak and under the earth with four nails (spikes to fasten the coffin): so the mother must set (pawn) and sell her child's inheritance, since she has the keeping and guarding as long as [the child] is under age, that it dies not from frost or from hunger.

102. Let us now pass over the Zuiderzee, formerly the northern outlet of the Rhine, and by the irruptions of the German ocean enlarged to a mediterranean sea. The Friesians living on that side were ever the object of the tyranny of the Dutch counts, [Hollandsche Graven,] and after a furious struggle of three hundred years, in which their love of freedom and undaunted bravery recalled the days of Greece, they were at last subdued by the united forces of the Count and Emperor. Political power, assisted by the influence of the priests, soon triumphed in spoiling their national language and character. The country is, however, in some maps still marked Westfriesland, now called Noordholland; and when at Amsterdam you pass the Y, a narrow water separating this town from Westfriesland, you perceive distinctly that you are amongst another people. The peculiarities of Zaandam, Broek, and other villages by which the inhabitants of North Holland are distinguished from other Dutchmen, are too well known to be recorded here. I will only mention the particular, that the peasants of Waterland still spoke Friesic in the middle of the 17th century.

103. We pass from North to South Holland. As we proceed and approach nearer to Sincfalla, (now the Swin or Hazegat, on the left side of the mouth of the Scheld,) the ancient southern border of Friesia, we find the Friesians, who were thinly scattered along the coasts, were the earlier blended with their more powerful neighbours. Nor are any traces of their tongue and character to be found, except in a few names of villages. It, however, deserves our attention, that the Flemish tongue

<sup>c</sup> A.-S. beheoldan custodire, despicere; to behold. The Frs. v. have beheld to keep, to have; but not in the signification of to view.

<sup>d</sup> A.-S. forfaran perire, compounded of for and faran to go, as perire of per and ire.

now in use in that part of Belgium, bordering the southern frontier of Friesland, has retained a great many Friesian forms of words.

104. It is for the third time that I return to Jutland, to investigate the relics of the Friesian tongue, still existing in some dialects.

105. The remains of the Friesic on the western coast, conterminous to that of the Angles, have been mentioned, § 93.

106. East-Friesland, lying between the Ems and the Jade, has forfeited all its claims to Friesian nationality. About the end of the 17th century, the people still spoke Friesic, though greatly corrupted by broad Low-Saxon. I am in possession of the celebrated Memoriale Linguae Friesicæ, exhibiting the state of this language in 1691, composed by Johannes Cadovius Muller, the clergyman of Stedesdorf.

107. On the east side of East-Friesland, lies a small tract of country enclosed by the Ems and the Lee, which from its marshy ground is inaccessible during several months of the year; it is called Sagelterland, or Saterland, where Friesic is still spoken. In this retired spot, which has no way of access, and offers no allurements to strangers in hopes of gain, many thousand words represent the true sounds of Friesian speech.

Amongst these many bear a striking resemblance to English words, not apparent in the present Country-Friesic. For instance, Sagel. ji; Frs. v. ja; Eng. yes; A.-S. gise. Sagel. jier; Frs. v. jier; Eng. year; A.-S. gear. Sagel. liddel; Frs. v. lyts; Frs. h. lyk; Eng. little. Sagel. noase; Frs. v. noas; Eng. nose; A.-S. nose. Sagel. queden; Eng. imperf. quoth; A.-S. cweðan. Sagel. slepen; Frs. v. sliepe; Eng. to sleep. Sagel. two; Frs. v. twa; Eng. two; A.-S. twa. Sagel. fiaurtin; Frs. v. fjirtjin; Eng. fourteen: and as to the shades of signification in such words as Sagel. miede meadow; Frs. v. miede hayland. Saterland, forming part of the kingdom of Hanover, has the same king as England.

108. We lastly enter Friesland, properly so called, which is surrounded on the north, west, and south, by the Zuiderzee, forming almost a peninsula, and frequented little by strangers, unless it be for the sake of commerce. Here the Friesians have manifested their national feelings; here Tacitus and his contemporaries fixed their residence; here the Friesians dwelt in past ages, and, through all the vicissitudes of time, here they remain to the present day. It is for this reason that the French geographer observes: “Dixhuit siècles ont vu le Rhin changer son cours et l’océan engloutir ses rivages; la nation Frisonne est restée debout comme un monument historique, digne d’intéresser également les descendants des Francs, des Anglo-Saxons, et des Scandinaves.”* This country bears the simple name of Friesland [Friesland], which has continued unaltered through all ages, and was respected even by Napoleon himself, who altered all other names. The surrounding parts are named according to their relative position with regard to this centre; hence the name of East-Friesland between the Ems and the Jade, and West-Friesland on the opposite coast of the Zuiderzee.

* Précis de la Géographie Universelle, par M. Malte-Brun, tom. i. p. 344, Paris, 1810.

109. It is, however, not merely the name which distinguishes Old-Friesland in the present day, it is also the language of its inhabitants, which, from the circumstance of its being unintelligible to the Dutch, still proves itself to be Friesian. At least a hundred thousand people speak the language commonly called Country-Friesic, which on comparison will be found to possess more true Anglo-Saxon sounds than any other dialect. In § 101, I have already given a specimen of the Old-Friesic of the 13th century, with a Country-Friesic version. I shall now add another specimen, being a literal version of some stanzas by the Countess of Blessington, occurring in the Book of Beauty of the year 1834.

110. This and the other specimen (§ 101) exhibit the Country-Friesic in its present state.

Country-Friesic.

Stanzas by the Countess of Blessington.

What art thou, Life ?
A weary strife
Of pain, care,<sup>e</sup> and sorrow ;
Long hours of grief,<sup>f</sup>
And joys—how brief !
That vanish the morrow.

Death, what art thou,
To whom all bow,
From sceptred king to slave ?
The last, best friend,
Our cares to end,
Thy empire is in the grave.

When all have fled
Thou giv'st a bed,
Wherein we calmly<sup>i</sup> sleep :
The wounds all heal'd,
The dim<sup>j</sup> eyes seal'd,
That long did wake and weep.

111. The following specimen shows what the same dialect was about 1650, nearly two centuries earlier. It is a rustic song composed by Gysbert Japicx, supposed to be sung by a peasant on his return from a wedding-feast.

<sup>a</sup> It is the genius of the Anglo-Friesic, 1st, to change the u after s, obvious in all other dialects, into the consonant w; thus súet becomes swê: 2nd, to change the e into i; swet, A.-S. swete, whether written or not with i, is pronounced like i. In the same way, lede people, rede counsel, were pronounced lide, ride, by contraction Frs. v. lie, rie.

Ofke, she said, each (every) year a child . . .
Were I maiden! I would (wish) it so yern

Now each runs about as a slut,

Then the heaven shall (will) give over thy

Luck (fortune) and mild (liberal) blessings.

<sup>c</sup> Hóatse, the proper name of a man, becomes that of a female by adding ke, Hóatske, at present Hoátse and Hoátke. A great many of these proper names of the Friesians are become familiar names in Eng. by adding son. Thus, Watse, Ritse, Hodse, Gibbe, Friesian proper names, become Watse-son, Ritse-son, Hodse-son, Gibbe-son; in the Friesian syntax, the son of Watse, &c., by contraction, Watson. Ritson, Hodson, Gibbson (Gibbon).

<sup>d</sup> Snein Sunday, Senen-dei, by contraction Sneen-dei, and casting away dei, Sneen, whence Suen and Snein. The Hindelopians still say Senne-dei or Sendei. Galbema, p. 30, has Sonendei; and the Charter-boek, I. p. 534, 536, Snayndé dies solis. dei is also cast away in fric, and Frs. v. freed Fri-day. Correct, Junius, Gloss. Goth. p. 310.

112. To give some idea of the Hindelopian dialect, I shall add a few lines which I found written above the months of January, February, and May, in a Hindelopian calendar for seamen. The Hindelopians were formerly all seamen, even in the beginning of the present century.

Nyje deggen,<sup>a</sup> nyje winscen,
Nyje ré<sup>b</sup> fan nyje minschen!
Sunden wârdven lichst<sup>d</sup> fan fry.

Februarius het xxviii deggen.
Silers<sup>e</sup> meye winters reste,
Thûs tu blieuwen mut jerm leste;

Mengwar<sup>h</sup> scoe men better dwân.

Majus het xxxi deggen.
As we tommelje oeuwer 't wetter,

Su 's de wrâld ek as de sê,

January has xxxi days.
New days, new wishes,
New rede (counsel) of new men.
Were our life (conduct) eke so (also as) new
We grew lightly free from sins.

February has xxviii days.
Sailors may rest in winter,
To stay at home (to house) must please them.
(If) one let earthly sorrow more stand (be)
Many times we should (would) do better.

May has xxxi days.
As we tumble (are tossed) over the water (Then) we have it slim (bad<sup>m</sup>) and sometimes (then) what (a little) better.
So the world is eke (also) as the sea, Sometimes full of delight, sometimes full of need.

<sup>a</sup> As we have had in the preceding læst for last a burden, fæst for fast, let for late, so here deggen for daggen. The A.-S. used also fæst, dæg: but what may be the reason why the Eng. in a thousand such words write a, although they have ever retained the old pronunciation of e? Does this oddity date from the time when a, losing entirely its genuine meaning, was called e?

<sup>k</sup> Slim bad, wrong; properly curved, crooked; Dut. Kil. slimvoet loripes; slim distortus. In the same way, wrong (derived from A.-S. wringan, Frs. v. wringe to wring) is properly tortus. This primary signification of wringing is likewise in A.-S. slincan, slingan to sling; whence the frequentative form Frs. v. slingerje, and in slang a snake. In Dut. as in the north of England, slim tortuous has the analogical signification of sly. But slim denotes also weak and thin of shape in Eng. In Icel. lam is a fracture, lama fractus viribus, whence at slæma (as Eng. slim from lim limus) debilitare; Eng. slim weak, slight. It is not impossible that A.-S. lim limb, as a fracture, division, or member, belongs to this class. Further we find A.-S. hlæne lean, and with the sibilant instead of the aspirate: Dut. Frs. v. slank thin of shape, opposed to the swelling of an inflamed wound. Frs. v. linkje to grow less in bulk. Slink furrow between banks in sea. Eng. slim slender, thin of shape.

<sup>l</sup> Kurje security and peace. From A.-S. cyse or cyre electio; kar in the Swed. laws is full freedom in his actions, and security against all violence in his house. In the same way, Frs. v. wâld, and A.-S. wela felicity, is from Dut. walen and welen eligere.

113. The never-ceasing floods of Germans at last overwhelmed the Friesians and their nationality. Had the Friesians sought for some refuge in the heart of the ocean, like their English brethren, they would have braved the combined force of all the continental tyrants, whether crowned, or representing the hydra of democracy. Only the North-Friesic, Saterlandic, Sciermonnikoogian, Country-Friesic, and Hindelopian remain as fragments that have resisted the influence of invaders to the present day.

114. Low-Saxon has prevailed in all the country between Schleswic and the Dutch Zuiderzee, once possessed by the Friesians: it varies indeed in its dialects being always affected by the tongue of the bordering people; in one part smooth and fluent, in another broad and coarse, as in the province of Groningen. All, however, are of an homogeneous nature, so that a person acquainted with one of them easily understands all the others.

115. Glossaries of all these dialects have been formed.

Of the dialect of Holstein by J. F. Schutze in his Holsteinisches Idiotikon, 4 tom. Hamburg, 1800;—of the dialect of Hamburg by Michael Richey, in his Idioticon Hamburgense, Hamburg, 1754;—of that of Bremen and Werden by Kelp, on which notes are to be found in the Collectanea Etymologica of Leibnitz I. p. 33, Hanover, 1717; and not only of the dialect of Bremen, but also of the Low-Saxon in general, by a society of Bremish philologists in their Versuch eines Bremisch-Niedersächsischen Wörterbuchs, Bremen, 1767, 5 vols; it will be unnecessary to cite more. I must, however, add, that a specimen of the present East-Friesic is to be found in the Sanghsone, a collection of songs and poetry, printed at Emden, 1828, Woortman.

116. While these dialects prevail in those parts of Old-Friesland extending from Schleswic nearly to the northern coasts of the Zuiderzee, Dutch is spoken in North Holland, South Holland, and Zealand, and Flemish in the country surrounding Antwerp, and in Flanders.

117. I beg leave to draw the attention of the Anglo-Saxon scholar to the Low-Saxon glossaries above mentioned. Many hundred Anglo-Saxon words will be elucidated, as to their form and meaning, by closely comparing them with the Low-Saxon. Low-Saxon has all the appearance of German grafted on an Anglo-Friesic tree. The words are Anglo-Friesic with German vowels, as if the Friesians, in adopting the German, retained the consonants of the old language. This observation may with still greater propriety be applied to the syntax and phraseology, that is, to the mental part or soul of the language. They continued to think in Anglo-Friesic forms, whilst their organs adopted the vowels and some other mechanical parts of the German. Hence there is scarcely a single expression or phrase extant in Anglo-Saxon, Friesic, or Dutch, of which the parallel is not to be found in the Low-Saxon glossaries. In short, it is the Anglo-Friesic idiom, with words of Germanic form. This observation also explains another phenomenon, which is, that scarcely a single scholar, a native of any place on the coast of the German sea, where Low-Saxon is the mother-tongue, possesses the true genius of the German language. Though Klopstock was born at Hamburg, yet I venture to affirm that no scholar of the stamp of T. D. Wiarda is acquainted with the true spirit of the German tongue.

118. It is for this reason, that any one who intends to compose a syntax of the Anglo-Saxon, after having thoroughly investigated the Friesic and Dutch, must not omit to compare almost every part with the Low-Saxon glossaries. This is an important and almost a new task. To this day the syntax of the Anglo-Saxon, requiring a deep insight into the hidden springs of speech, has been but rudely developed, only hinted at even by Rask, while the different forms of conjugation and declension have been analyzed with the most minute attention.

119. Moreover, if the syntax of the Anglo-Saxon be the basis of the English syntax, as I think it is, notwithstanding a partial degeneration since the Norman conquest by a mixture with French,* the absurdity is felt of modelling the construction of the English according to that of corrupt Latin, known by the name of French. The construction of the French language is as regularly arranged as the pipes of an organ, while the most diversified inversion, exceeded only by that of the Latin and Greek, characterizes the Anglo-Saxon and Friesic; and the more the English is made to differ from this standard of propriety, the more it deviates from its original form and its very nature. The diction and idiom, forming the mirror of the soul of nations, are in English and French as widely different as the character of the respective people. Hence the phenomenon, that when a foreigner well acquainted with the French easily understands an English author, it is certain that this writer is not possessed of the true genius of the English language. Addison may be deemed neat, pure, elegant, and fluent—but he is not English. Shakspeare wrote English; in him the English tongue and genius are represented.

120. Great clamours have arisen about the total corruption of the English language by the mixture of French and other foreign words, and I readily grant that a rich language, possessed of the power of forming compound words from simples, wants no foreign words to express even new objects and ideas. But permit me to observe, that the deficiency has not hitherto been supplied with due consideration and taste. For when an author (the translator of the Lord's Prayer for instance) uses a certain number of foreign words, it is no proof that the English language had not words of its own to express the same ideas. The fact is, that many thousand foreign words have been introduced when native terms already existed, and the English has, in this way, been endowed with the power of expressing the same idea by two different * "Children in scole against the usage and manir of all othir nations beeth compelled for to leve hire owne langage, and for to construe hir lessons and hir thynges in Frenche."—Trevisa's Translation of Hygden's Polychronicon. words—or, what is of still greater value, of appropriating this new word to mark some modification in the meaning of the indigenous word. In the phrases “Forgive us our debts, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil,” could there not be found amongst all the stores of the English language some words to express the ideas of debt, temptation, and deliver? If these words now bear significations somewhat different from those of the foreign ones, if foreign words have usurped the office of native ones, this is no argument that at all affects the richness and proper essence of the language.

121. For a proof of what I have advanced, I beg to refer the English reader to the Friesic pieces I have translated into English: this, however imperfect, will not I hope be entirely disregarded.

My object was to show the analogy between the two languages, by translating them as literally as possible; and the cognate words in English which do not perfectly agree with the Friesic in sense, I have explained by others in parentheses. In 1200 words I have only had recourse to 50 which are not of Saxon origin—a number which might be greatly diminished by a scholar thoroughly acquainted with the original stores of the English language. At this rate, about every twenty-fourth word of the original fund of the language is lost. In 125 words in parentheses, I used 50 foreign words: here one word is lost out of every  $2\frac{1}{2}$ . The number of words was 1200; add the words in parentheses 125, it makes a total of 1325. The foreign words in 1200 were 50, and in parentheses, 50, making the sum of 100. Then  $\frac{1325}{100} = 13\frac{1}{4}$ ; shows that there is one foreign word for every thirteen English.

122. The stanzas of the Countess of Blessington contain seventy-seven words, of which eight are of foreign origin, namely, pain, hours, joy, scald, vanish, sceptred, empire, brief. Thus in nine and a half English terms, one word is exotic.

123. The foreign words in the English language are, for the most part, used to express scientific or abstract ideas, and were introduced from the French. These terms, however, do not suit the feelings of the poet; he involuntarily has recourse to the original stores of his native tongue—to the varied construction, and the energetic and picturesque diction of the Anglo-Saxon—a language formed by his valiant forefathers in their savage, that is, poetical state. This remark fully accounts for the phenomenon, that a reader who is a little acquainted with French and Latin, easily understands the writings of an English lawyer, divine, or philosopher, while he boggles at every sentence of the poets, whose Anglo-Saxon words and construction are equally unknown to him.

124. The Anglo-Saxon appears greatly disfigured as it is at present represented in the English. But as the granting of citizenship to foreign words, and the moulding of them to an English form, have led to fundamental laws in the English language, every one will allow the great advantage that results from such a change. While all the stores of the numberless tongues on the globe became perfectly English when introduced into England, the Dutch, on the contrary, which may boast of exquisite purity, cannot adopt a single word without its bearing the mark of its foreign origin.

125. Finally, it scarcely needs be mentioned, that as genuine English words are for the most part Anglo-Saxon, an agreement of Friesic with English naturally implies an agreement of Friesic with Anglo-Saxon. It is for this reason, that the parallel Anglo-Saxon words are not always cited in the specimens in §§ 95, 97, &c. This comparison would also have taken too much time to pay due attention to the different degrees of development by which words of the same age are often distinguished from one another.

126. All that has been said about the analogy between the Anglo-Saxon and Friesic, tends to prove that the Friesic tongue is absolutely indispensable in determining, as far as it is now possible, the genuine pronunciation of the Anglo-Saxon; and that preceding writers, in passing over the Friesic, overlooked an important source of knowledge.

127. What is less pardonable in modern Anglo-Saxon scholars, is their complete neglect of English in this respect. Their ignorance of the English, as of the Friesic, will not, I hope, be alleged as an excuse. Is not the English tongue, as to its descent and substance, still a genuine daughter of the Anglo-Saxon? Does she not bear to this very day some features of her fair mother, notwithstanding her foreign ornaments? Do not many Anglo-Saxon vowels still exist in Yorkshire, in Scotland, and in other provincial dialects of England? May not the English alone boast of having preserved the true sound of the old etch (þ th), which has disappeared from the whole continent of Europe, so as not even to leave the means of forming a faint idea of the sound of this consonant, without the aid of the English? Why should we consult only the Gothic, or the Icelandic, which is still more remote from the Anglo-Saxon? Why should that which is unknown be sought amongst the unknown, rather than in that which is known in the remains of the old sounds of the language? With a competent knowledge of the subject, and fair induction, I presume that no source can afford so much light in the pronunciation and other peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon as the English.

128. Of late, the accent by which some Anglo-Saxon MSS. are marked, is held as one of the most efficient means of ascertaining the true pronunciation of the Anglo-Saxon, and Wilkins and other publishers are to be blamed for omitting them. It is here necessary to state my opinion on this subject. A mark of accent, in modern tongues, may have three applications:—1st. It may denote the stress of the voice on a certain syllable, and this is perhaps the only purpose for which the accent (') may be lawfully used. 2nd. But, improperly and contrary to its original design, it may denote the very nature of the sound of the vowel. And 3rd. it may be used to designate the lengthening of a short vowel, without altering the nature of its sound.

In above and comfort, you hear the short sound of o, and in ghost, potent, low, we have the long sound ; but in loose, the very nature of the sound is changed and varies from o to the French ou, and in for to au. Suppose pótent to be noted by the accent, and the sound of the o to be unknown to you : what will this accent then mean ? Will it signify simply the lengthening of the short o ? or one of the four or five modifications of the sound of o ? and which of the modifications ? Or does it mean that po in potent has the stress ? If no one can ascertain to which of these six or seven purposes this single mark is applied, of what use can it be in settling the pronunciation of Anglo-Saxon ?

129. Let us endeavour to illustrate the subject by some instances from Cædmon, published by Mr. Thorpe.

Is the a long in þá then, (Cd. Th. p. 20, 11,) [þa, 20, 6,] contrary to the short a in Frs. v. da ; Moes. than ; Dut. dan then, and agree with the Icelandic þá tunc, pronounced thau or tav ? Or does it denote a inclining to o ? Or does it mean a modified a little by i ? Is a long in náman, (Cd. Th. p. 9, 11,) contrary to Moes. nemo ; Frs. v. namme ; Icel. namn and nafn, which have all short a ? Or does it mean an inclination of the a to the sound of the old o in δνομα and nomen ? The same question may be applied to hám, (Cd. Th. p. 108, 33,) Eng. home ; and we further ask if the accent, in this instance, can also signify the verging of a to i (âi) apparent in Moes. haim abode ; Icel. heimr domus ; Hesychius εἰμαδες ποιμνῶν οἰκίαι ; Frs. v. hiem homestead or the land just around a farm-house, enclosed by a ditch. What is the pronunciation of éngel, (Cd. Th. p. 137, 1,) written engel, p. 137, 23 ? If the e is long, then it is pronounced eengel, contrary to* the pronunciation of the continental descendants of the Anglo-Saxons, but agreeing with that of their direct posterity the English in their angel ? What is the sound of ý in þýsne this, (Cd. Th. p. 52, 6) ? Is it long, and opposed to the present Eng. this, and Frs. v. disse, Asg. bk. 2, 3, 271, 278, thesse ; Frs. l. 2, 5, disse ? Tell me also the meaning of the accent in life, (Cd. Th. p. 103, 4). Is the vowel only lengthened, and life pronounced liife ? Or has it the diphthongal nature of the Eng. i in life ? Or is it perhaps like ij in Dut. lyf body ? If the i in witan to reproach, (Cd. Th. p. 51, 9,) in wíte-hús torture-house, (p. 3, 21,) differ in its sound from i in witan to know, Frs. v. wite, like Icel. víta reprehendere, from Icel. vit ratio, has the i then a long sound as wiitan, or like the Dut. ij in wijten imputare, or ei in weitan ?—What do you say of ó in nóm cepit ? Must the ó only be made long, as noom, or is the o modified as if united with a, as in Frs. v. nóam ? Is the ó long in bórd shield, (Cd. Th. p. 193, 28,) contrary to Icel. bord, Dut. bord, both being short like Moes. baurd ? Or is it something similar to the Frs. v. ou, or Frs. v. oe in boerd ? What is the sound of ó in wordum with words ? Is the o long as in Dut. woord, opposed to Moes. waurd ; Frs. v. wird ; Icel. ord ? Or is it pronounced like woárden, as the inhabitants of the Friesian towns speak ? Or does it denote the stress of the voice falling upon wor ? Is ón, (Cd. Th. p. 64, 1,) pronounced oon, contrary to Moes. ana [short a] and Eng. on ? Or does it agree with Dut. aan, Frs. v. óan ? Finally, what does the accent mean above ræd narration, derived from short a in Moes. rathan numerare, A.-S. rædan to read ? Is the vowel long ? Or is some sound like Fr. ai in mais designated ? As soon as Anglo-Saxon scholars will answer these questions, and show me the rule which regulates the application of this single mark, in every particular instance, I will gladly observe every accent found in the MSS., and in the mean time I beg to be allowed my own opinion.

130. Far* from depreciating the use of marks of accents, I am fully

* As the sounds were more numerous than the letters, especially in the earliest state of the language, when the system of the vowels was more developed, and the letters fewer, being only sixteen Runes, it is evident that many letters must have had a double and even a triple convinced of their being indispensable in the dead languages; but if two marks are used to denote the spiritus, and three the accent, in Greek, [ ' ' ' ^ ]—and these are far from conveying a just idea of the pronunciation of this language—how could a single mark effect this in Anglo-Saxon? And how is this single mark used? It is sometimes inserted, and sometimes omitted, even in MSS. boasting of some accuracy in this respect, as the MSS. of Cædmon. I will not mention other MSS., as Beowulf in the British Museum, Vitellius A. xv., in which three marks [ ' ^ ^ ] are employed with so much confusion, that the grammarian, in using them, has not only confounded the ideas of emphasis, the nature of sound, and the simple lengthening of sound, as perhaps all who have used the accents in Anglo-Saxon MSS. have done, but he has often misapplied the marks. Several attempts have been made in our day to invent proper signs, and to define the true force of each; but, as if it were to increase the confusion, the two principal advocates of accents, Rask and Grimm, differ in the import they ascribe to the same sign.

131. It may be here asked, whether the authors themselves made use of accents, or their copiers, or if a later hand added them? Finally, whether it was the hand of a genuine Anglo-Saxon, or whether, after the Danish conquest, it was some writer who had a strong tincture of Danish pronunciation that accented the MSS. Should I live to make my intended inquiries on the changes of the vowels, I may perhaps throw some light on the subject.

132. Since the pronunciation of the old languages depends on the sound of the letters, it is important to inquire what these letters were.

I answer, that the old Saxon letters were Runic. Rhabanus Maurus has left a Runic alphabet of the Marcomanni, called by some Nordmanni and Northalbingii,* located on the northern banks of the Elbe, and thus on the same spot that the allies of the Angles, the Saxons, inhabited. On comparing the form of these letters with the Runic alphabet of the Anglo-Saxons,† we shall perceive, on the whole, a striking resemblance, which is to me a convincing proof that the Anglo-Saxons brought with them the Runic alphabet into Britain. That these letters were once in common use among them, has been lately proved by the discovery of two sepulchral stones at Hartlepool,‡ bearing Runic inscriptions.§

sound. When, in process of time, the sounds which were sensibly distinct approached each other, the evil became still worse. Thus the e in red became in time the representative of eo in réod arundo; of éa in réad ruber, and of æ in ræd, Old Eng. rede consilium. This fully proves the necessity of marks to guide the pronunciation.

‡ An accurate delineation of these stones is to be found in the Gentleman's Magazine, Sept. 1833, p. 219.

§ Annuate Deo, Mr. Halbertsma intends to add in another publication, a second and third part to what is here given: the second on the sound of each Anglo-Saxon Letter—and the third part on the practical application of the preceding rules relative to the vowels, diphthongs, and consonants.

V.—THE SAXONS, OR OLD-SAXONS.

1. The Saxons* spoke the Old-Saxon, now called Low-German, or Platt-Deutsch.

2. The German confederacy, known under the name of Saxons, occupied the greater part of Low, Platt, or Northern Germany. They were divided into—1. Eastphalians, on the eastern borders of the Weser; 2. Westphalians, on the Western borders of the Weser down to the Rhine and the North Sea; 3. Angrivarians, situated between the Eastphalians and Westphalians, and the borders of the North Sea; 4. North-Albingians, from the north of the river Elbe to Denmark; 5. Trans-Albingians, comprising the whole country from the Elbe to the river Oder, with the exception of those districts occupied by the Wends or Sorbians, near the Baltic, and in the neighbourhood of the Oder. These Saxons, or Old-Saxons, chiefly remaining in their ancient localities, retained their low, soft, or Old-Saxon dialect in great purity. The Anglo-Saxons, a branch of the Old-Saxons, wrote and matured their language in England; hence it differs from the tongue of their continental progenitors. The Old-Saxon, now called Low or Platt-German, seems to be conveyed down to the present day with few alterations, and those only such as time always produces; but as we have no specimen of it earlier than the Heliand in the 9th century, we do not know the exact form of the Old-Saxon from which the Anglo-Saxon was derived. This Low-German, so called from being the vernacular language of Platt, or Low-Germany, or of the common people, is, even in the present day, very extensive, being spoken by the lower classes in the greater part of Westphalia, in Hanover, Holstein, Sleswick, a part of Jutland, in Mecklenburg, Magdeburg, Brandenburg, Pomerania, the kingdom of Prussia, and as far north as Livonia and Estonia.†

3. The origin and ancient history of the Saxons are enveloped in much darkness. The Fosi mentioned by Tacitus‡ were most likely Saxons,

The MSS. are preserved at Munich, and in the British Museum, London. Some extracts were published under the name of Franco-Theotisc in Hickes's Thes. vol. ii. p. 101, and also by Nyerup at Copenhagen, 1787; but the whole was well edited, and splendidly published, with the following title:—

This book is for the unlearned prepared,
And is called a mirror of human happiness,
Therein may one learn, by what means
God would make man,
And how man was condemned,
And how God again that has changed.
Lucifer boasted against God his Saviour,
Therefore threw he him into the gulph instantly.

How the lion, king of all animals, ordered to be proclaimed and published a fast peace, and commanded all animals to come to his court.

It happened on a Whitsunday,
 That men saw the woods and fields
 Green, standing with leaves and grass,
 And many a fowl joyful was,
 With song in hedges and on trees ;
 The herbs and the blooms sprouted,
 Which well perfumed here and there :
 The day was fine, the weather clear.
 Nobel the king of all beasts
 Held a court, and had it proclaimed
 Throughout his land every where.
 There came many lords with great noise
 Also came to the court many stately fellows
 Whom men could not all tell.
 Lutke the crane, and Marquart the magpie,
 Yes, these were there altogether ;
 For the king, with his lords,
 Meant to hold court with splendour,
 With rejoicing and with great honour,
 And had summoned there to the court,

 He had at court so much misdone
 That he there durst not go or come.

 So did Renard, the wicked wight,
 He shunned much the king's court
 Wherein he had a sad report.

* The author has been very anxious to be correct. He has generally cited his authorities, and to secure as much accuracy as possible, he has consulted his friends, amongst whom he ought to mention Professor Siegenbeek, with gratitude, for his kindness in correcting the manuscript. Those who wish for more minute information on the Dutch language and literature, will find ample information in the following works:—Beknopte Geschiedenis der Nederlandsche Letterkunde, door *Professor M. † The name of Holland, as Mr. Halbertama observes, is not heard of before the eleventh century [1064]. The meaning of Holland exactly suits the fenny and boggy soil which it designates. The oldest Dutch authors write it ollant. Thus Maerlant says—

“Doe wart coninc Loduwike
Karel die caluwe, die wel geraecte,
Die eerst graue jn ollant maecte.”

Vol. iii. p. 13, v. 8.

And again, “Comes de Ollandia,” a Count of Holland. See Huydecoper on Melis Stoke, vol. i. p. 524. Look for this word in the Teuthonista of van der Schueren, and you will find “Beven daveren als eyn ollant, Scatere,” tremble under the feet as a marshy ground.

The word ol, in the sense of dirty or glutinous matter, mud, does not appear in Anglo-Saxon, but it is found in a derived signification. Ol, occasionally changed to hol, signifies calumnia. Wachendonck, in his Rhyme Chronicle, observes:

“Hollant, een nieuwe naem, die schijnt 't lant te passen, Alsoo het meest bestaet in veeën en moerassen.”

of the Batavi,* the first inhabitants on record, as being located towards the mouths of the Rhine, between the Whaal,† the most southerly stream of the Rhine, and the other branches to the north: thus the dominions of the Batavi appear to have extended from Dordrecht to about Haarlem. The country is generally low and marshy, and seems formed or enriched by the alluvial deposits brought down by the various streams into which the Rhine was divided as it approached the sea. Pliny, the naturalist, about a century after Cæsar, gives a minute description of it as a land, where "the 'ocean pours in its flood twice every day, and produces a perpetual uncertainty whether the country may be considered as a part of the continent or the sea.'‡ The genius and industry of men have prevailed. The Hollanders or Dutch have originally taken their possessions from the dominion of the deep; and the exercise of the perpetual thought, care, and industry, necessary first to raise, and then keep up such mighty embankments as defend them from their constant assailant the raging sea, has educated a people, adventurous, brave, and cautious. The Dutch, applying these habits to the cultivation of their intellectual powers, have thus taken the first rank in polite literature, and have also been successful cultivators of the arts and sciences. We are indebted to the Dutch not only for the discovery of oil painting,§ but for the finest specimens of the art: they were also the inventors of printing,|| painting on glass, and, as some say, of the pendulum, the microscope, &c.

* Bataver is thought by many to be contracted from Bat-auwers, that is, inhabitants of good or fruitful land, from bat, bet good (still found in beter), and auwe ground or country. It is supposed that the name is preserved in a part of Gelderland, the Betuwe fruitful country, in opposition to Veluwe bad land, from vale falling, defective, and ouwe land, country.—Hist. of Dut. Language, by Ypey.

|| At Haarlem, by Laurence Koster, about 1423. His real name was Lourens Janszoon Koster, a celebrated citizen of Haarlem, born about 1370. He was treasurer of the city, and held other important offices. I once thought that Gutenberg of Mayence was the inventor of printing in 1440, (Elements of Anglo-Saxon Gr. p. 16); but every impartial person, upon a close investigation of the evidence produced in recent works, must ascribe the honour of the invention to Koster. Ample proof will be found in Verhandeling van Koning over den oorsprong, de uitvinding, verbetering en volmaking der Boekdrukkunst te Haarlem, 1816, bij Loosjes. Gedenkschriften wegens het vierde eeuwgetijde van de uitvinding der Boekdrukkunst door Lourens Janszoon Koster van stadswege gevierd te Haarlem den 10 en 11 Julij 1823, bijeenverzameld door Vincent Loosjes, te Haarlem 1824. Mr. Jacobus Scheltema's geschied en Letterkundig Mengelwerk, vol. v. vi. One authority, among many others, is so strong in favour of Holland, that it cannot be omitted. A German chronicle of the year 1499, acknowledges that though Mayence improved the art, it was first known in Holland. "Item wie wil die kunst is vonden tzo Mentz, als vursz up die wyse, als dan nu gemeynlich gebrucht wirt, so is doch die eyrate vurbyldung vonden in Hollant uyss den Donaten, die daeselfst vur der tzyt gedrukt syn. Ind van ind uyss den is genomen dat begynne der vursz kunst. Ind is vill meysterlicher ind subtilicher vonden, dan die selve manier was, und ye langer ye mere kunstlicher wurden." Item, though this art was found (out) as aforesaid at Mayence, in that manner in which it is now commonly practised, yet the first idea was taken in Holland from the Donates which were there published before that time. And from and out of them is taken the beginning of the aforesaid art. And is much more masterly and neatly performed than the former manner was, and the longer (it has continued) the more perfect it has become.—Cronica van der hilliger stat v Coellē. Gedrukt te Keulen, by Johannes Koelhoff, in den jare 1499. Gedenkschriften van de uitvinding der Boekdrukkunst, p. 437.

2. This small country has had more than its share of eminent men. It has produced an Erasmus, a Vossius, Lipsius, Junius, Grotius, Heinsius, Rubens, van Dyk, Rembrandt, Boerhave, van Lennep, and Bilderdijs. Ten Kate developed the grammatical principles which have been so fully and ably illustrated by Dr. J. Grimm in his Deutsche Grammatik. Let it also be ever remembered that this land of freedom has not only fostered native talent, but supported and encouraged it wherever it was found. Here Linnæus formed and matured his Systema Naturæ: here Haller studied, Descartes first received encouraging support, and at Gouda Locke finished his immortal work on Human Understanding. From Holland also has flowed a stream of classical erudition, conveyed in pure Latinity, and benefited the whole of Europe by the accurate and beautiful specimens of typography which issued from the press of the Elzevirs, Wetsteins, and other eminent printers. While, for their skill in the learned languages, their classical scholars have acquired European fame, the native tongue, which informed the mind and warmed the heart of the Hollander, has been either entirely unknown or disregarded by other nations, though it is a language of Teutonic origin, and well deserves the attention of the philologist, being one of the purest, most nervous, and expressive of the Gothic root.

3. We have no evidence of the language which was spoken by the Batavi in Cæsar's time, but, as they were a German race, it must have had a Teutonic origin. That this language has undergone some mutations, will be evident from a very short view of the political changes which have taken place. Such changes as affected the language arose from tribes of Teutonic origin; their language, therefore, was only altered by some small dialectic variations, and still remained Teutonic.

4. The Batavi were allies of the Romans, who constantly eulogize Batavian bravery and fidelity; but about the end of the 3rd century the Batavi were much oppressed by other Gothic nations, as the Saxons, Salian Franks, and other hordes, which forcibly obtained the settlements of the Batavi. Thus the country became inhabited by a mixture of Germanic tribes,* which were subject to the Francic power till the time of Charlemagne and his sons.

Vincent Loosjes, Haarlem, 1824. A learned Italian, Tommaso Tonelli of Florence, after visiting Holland, and making minute and personal inquiries concerning the discovery of printing, unhesitatingly declares that the invention must be ascribed to Lawrence Koster.—Antologia di Firenze, Vol. 41, Jan.—April, 1831.

* That the present Dutch are descended from the Batavi, is the opinion of some learned Dutch authors, such as Erasmus, Junius, Dousa, Grotius, and Scriverius. Grotius asserts boldly, [De Antiquitate Reipublicæ Batavica, c. iii. ad finem,] that the ever-succeeding invaders of the Insula Batavorum were swallowed up in the bulk of the Batavian population, and that of course the present Dutch are the genuine offspring of the Batavians. Such was the importance of the Batavian support, that even the insurrection of the Batavi under Civilis could not prevent their restoration to the friendship of the proud conquerors of the world. As long as their name appears in history, the Batavi were the allies of the Romans. But that the present Dutch are the direct offspring of the Batavi, is still a controverted point; for the Batavians were exhausted by the never-ceasing levies of troops, and by the bloody battles of the Romans, often decided by Batavian valour, and being the last supports of the tottering

5. These pagan inhabitants and the Friesians did not listen to the preaching of the Francic monks. The Anglo-Saxons being more allied to the old Dutch, their missionaries had greater success. Willibrord,* with eleven Anglo-Saxon associates, in A.D. 692, left England, as missionaries to Heligoland, Friesland, Holland, Zealand, &c. They were countenanced by Pepin, Duke of the Franks.† Willibrord exerted himself so much, and was so successful, that he became the first bishop of Utrecht in A.D. 697.‡

6. In the 10th century this country had its own particular sovereigns, known by the name of Counts. Diederik§ was the first raised to the dignity of Count of Holland, in A.D. 903. There was a succession of thirty-six Counts, till Philip II. king of Spain in 1581, who was the last Count.|| Philip, being a bigoted catholic, and infringing the rights of Holland and the neighbouring states, Holland, united with four other provinces, at Utrecht in 1579, to resist the Spanish oppression. Soon after, in 1581, two other states joined, and constituted The Seven United Provinces, which solemnly renounced the authority of Philip. William, Prince of Orange and Nassau, first held the dignity as Stadtholder under the authority of Philip. After the rejection of Philip, William was to be made Count of Holland: all preliminary steps were taken, and there was nothing wanted but the solemn inauguration, when he was assassinated at Delft in 1584. His sons, Maurice and Frederic Henry, held the dignity empire, they were crushed and almost annihilated by its downfall. The Germanic crowds of Saxons, Franks, and Cauchi, rushing on the borders of the Roman empire, could not suffer these socii, these amici et sodales populi Romani, to dwell with them on the same spot. Afterwards the Insula Batavorum is reported to be inhabited by the Franks, and the name of Batavi is never mentioned again in all the changes their country underwent. In succeeding periods the Insula Batavorum was occupied by the Chamari; [A.D. 287], by the Salii [A.D. 358], shortly after by the Guadi (read perhaps Cauchi) and in the reports of the battles of the Romans against these invaders, or of the invaders against each other, the name of Batavi is never mentioned. Eumenius states, that towards the end of the third century, the Insula Batavorum was possessed by Francic tribes. At last, about A.D. 470, the name of Batavi disappears for ever from history, and on this period it is justly observed by the Dutch historian Wagenaar, "This nation (the Batavi) seems to have been partly slain in the Roman armies, partly transplanted by the Romans, partly killed by foreign adventurers, or drawn away from their native soil, and partly blended amongst the Franks, the Saxons, and the Friesians, so as soon to obliterate even their name in this country." Now if the Batavi were extinguished in the fifth century, it will be difficult to discover much of Batavian blood in those who occupy their territories in the nineteenth century. of Stadtholder in succession till 1647, when William II. son of Frederic Henry, was invested with this authority.

7. The Stadtholder fled in 1795, and Holland became a more democratic republic. In 1806, Lewis Buonaparte, by the powerful influence of his brother Napoleon, was proclaimed King of Holland. This prince abdicated in 1810, and Holland was united to the French empire. In 1815, Belgium was joined to Holland, and the Prince of Orange Nassau was inaugurated King of the Netherlands under the name of William I. Belgium revolted in 1830.

From these political changes the language, especially in early times, must have been affected. A few specimens will best show the mutations and the progress of the Dutch tongue; but, before these are introduced, a few remarks upon its nature and character may not be useless.

8. The distinguishing characteristic of the Dutch language,* is descriptive energy. If it be not soft and musical, it is dignified, sonorous, and emphatic. It has great compositive power; all technical terms, which the English borrow from exotic sources, from the Latin and Greek, are composed by the Dutch from their own indigenous roots. Almost every polysyllabic word is descriptive of the object which it designates. In this respect the Dutch is much superior to the present English.† There is, however, a striking affinity between our language and the Dutch. Take as instances a Dutch proverb, and a short extract from Spiegel.

Maar duinen, bosch en beek, een lucht, een zelfde zon,
Dit water, dit land, beek, veld, stroom en boomgodinnen, Met maghteloose liefd wij hartelijk beminnen."

Hartspiegel, I. 127—130.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Parnassus is too wide; here is no Helicon,
But downs, wood, and beck, one air, one selfsame sun,
This water, this land, beck, field, stream, and wood-goddesses,
With mightless love we heartily admire.‡

* I cannot omit a remark on the importance of language, in designating the mental powers of a nation, written by a learned and truly patriotic Dutchman. "Elk volk hecht prijs aan het eigendommelijke van zijn karakter, aan hetgeen, waarin het zijne zedelijke waarde, het uitmuntende van zijne verstandsvermogens acht te bestaan; het moet dus, bij wettig gevolg, belang in die Taal stellen, welke het van alle volken onderscheidt."—Colloot d'Escury Hollands reem in kunsten en wetensch. iii. bl. 9.

9. The correct and emphatic version of the Scriptures, which owes its origin to the Synod of Dordrecht 1618—1619, affords a fine specimen of the expressive powers of the Dutch language. It is one of the best established versions, and the language of this translation is well calculated to express the devout and dignified emotions of the Christian.

10. The earlier the specimens of the Teutonic languages, the more striking are their affinity and analogy, which prove that they originally sprung from one source. The oldest compositions in Dutch are very similar to Low-German (Platt-Deutsch.)

THE FIRST SPECIMEN OF THE DUTCH LANGUAGE is taken from a translation of the Psalms made about A. D. 800. These Low-German Psalms, written in the time of the dynasty of Charlemagne, were published for the first time by F. H. von der Hagen Breslaw, 1816.* The manuscript of this translation is first mentioned in a letter of Lipsius to his friend Schottius, at Antwerp, dated Louvain, January 14th, 1599.† Professor A. Ypey of Groningen claims this fragment as a specimen of the old Low-German or Dutch. (Nederduitsch.)‡

11. The Flemish is so closely allied to the Dutch, that it may, especially in its earliest form, be considered the same language. In the thirteenth century, because of the flourishing state of the Flemings, and the care of their writers to observe great purity in their diction, and to express correctly the gender and inflection of words, this improved form of the Dutch language was denominated Flemish. Even at the present day Flemish appears to be nothing more than the Dutch of the preceding century.

13. Reinaert de Vos, an allegorical and satirical poem, is one of the most popular works ever published. The story soon spread over the whole of Europe, by translations into almost every language. The poem was first written in the old Flemish dialect, affording a fine and very early specimen of the language. The Flemish manuscript is undoubtedly the original of which the famous Low-Saxon Reineke Vos, published at Lubeck, 1498, is a free translation. The old prose editions of Reineke Vos, printed at Gouda, 1479, and Delft, 1485, appear to be only a negligent translation of the Flemish poem, even preserving, in many instances, the metre and rhyme of the original. The English version, by William Carton, 1481, was made from the Delft edition. By the indefatigable researches of Mr. J. F. Willems, it appears that the first part of the Flemish Reinaert was written about 1150, and by recent inquiries, as well as by the preface to his modernized Flemish Reinaert de Vos naer de oudste beryming, Eecloo, 1834, it is concluded that Willem van Uienhoven, a priest of Aerdenburg, was the real author* of the second part which was composed about the year 1250. Jacob van Maerlant, the father of the Flemish chroniclers and poets, so early as 1270, complains of the alterations and additions made by copyists of Reinaert's boerden, merry jests and tricks.

* Madok was not the author, for the name of such a writer cannot be found. In the passage where Madok occurs, it cannot be the name of a man; for, as Maerlant observes, it merely designates a poem, (Hoffmann's Horæ Belg. i. 21, by the fertile and learned writer

14. That some of the materials of this fine poem are taken from French works, is confessed by Willem van Utenhoven himself:

Daerom dedi de vite soeken,
Ende heeftse uten walschen boeken
In dietsche aldus begonnen.—Willems' Pref. p. xiv. l. 7.

Therefore did he the tricks (of the fox) seek,
And has them out of Welsh (foreign) books
In Dutch thus begun.

15. There have been many editions of this work. We have the erudite volume of Reinardus Vulpes, Carmen epicum seculis ix et xii conscriptum, ad fidem Codd. MSS. edidit et adnotationibus illustravit Franciscus Josephus Mone, Stuttgartiæ et Tubingæ, 1832; also Mr. O. M. Meon's highly interesting edition of nearly all the parts of the fables and tales of the Fox, treated by Piere de St. Cloud, Richard de Lison, Marie de France, &c. which appeared under the title Le Roman du Renard, publié d'après les MSS. de la Bibliothèque du Roi des xiii. xiv. et xv. siècles, Paris, 1826, chez Treuttel et Würz, 4 vols. 8vo. avec figures. The indefatigable researches of the learned Professor J. Grimm are published under the title Reinhart Fuchs, Berlin, 1834, These and other numerous editions, as well as the complaint of Waltherus de Coinsi, Prior of Vic sur Aisne in his Louanges de nostre Dame, and Miracles de la Vierge, that Renard was preferred to the reading of legends, sufficiently show how many pens it has occupied, and at what an early period this celebrated poem served for entertainment and instruction. A slight comparison of all these productions with the Flemish Reinaert de Vos must lead to the conviction, that whatever use its author may have made of the works of his predecessors, he has far surpassed them all, and has composed a work fully deserving the praises which the most competent judges have bestowed upon it. It is important both for matter and composition; and if it were the only interesting and valuable work existing in the old Dutch, it alone would fully repay the trouble of learning that language. This poem gives a true picture of the world, with all its orders, states, conditions, passions, and characters, in an easy Hoffmann von Fallersleben, to whom we are indebted for a very correct edition of Reineke Vos, from the Lubeck edition of 1498, with a valuable glossary). Besides, the article de is never used before Dutch proper names. That all may judge for themselves, the passage is here cited:—

"Willem die Madok maecte
Daer hi dicken omme waecte
Hem vernoide so haerde
Dat die geeste van Reinaerde
Niet te recht en es geschreven."

Willems' Reinaert de Vos, p. xlii.

"Willem, who wrote (made) Madok,
About which he was much awake,
Annoyed himself so much
That the actions of Reinaerde
Were not correctly written."

and flowing versification, in a rich, powerful, and sonorous language, hitherto, for want of knowing its powers, not so valued as it deserves.

16. Professor Grimm's invaluable Reinhart Fuchs is a rich mine of philology, history, and general information, that cannot fail to revive a love for the old Dutch or Flemish, which, notwithstanding all endeavours to suppress it, has still preserved its pristine vigour and strength. In the present age, the Flemish owes much to the patriotic feeling and well-directed energy of a native Fleming, J. F. Willems, Esq. whose exertions are above all praise.*

17. The first example is taken from Grimm's Reinhart Fuchs, Berlin, 1834, printed from the Codex Comburgensis, an old Flemish manuscript preserved at Stuttgart. There is still a manuscript of it at Antwerp; there was also one at Amsterdam, which a few years ago was sold to an Englishman.† The other example is taken from the modernised Flemish edition by J. F. Willems, 12mo. Eecloo, 1834. These may serve to show the great affinity of the Flemish dialect with the English:

A warm interest for the early literature of the Belgians has recently been revived, not only by the publications of Mr. Willems, but by Theophilus, a Flemish poem of the 14th century, and other pieces, just published by Mr. Blommaert of Ghent.

Al wie hy, om hof te houden,
 Roepen kon uit veld en wouden.
 Vele dieren kwamen daer,
 Groot en klein, een bonte schaer.
 Reinaert Vos, vol slimme treken,
 Bleef alleen het hof ontweken ;
 Want hy had te veel misdaen
 Om er heen te durven gaen.

 Reinaert had er veel te duchten ;
 Daerom schuwde hy het hof,

It was upon a Whitsunday,
 When over hedge and bush so gay
 Waved the greeny leaves of spring.
 At the command of Nobel, king,
 To his court they did convene
 All whom he did faithful ween,
 Bowing with submission true.
 Then to the royal court there drew
 All the beasts, both great and small,
 But one was missing of them all,
 Renard whose misdeeds were so great
 He durst no more approach the gate :
 A guilty conscience shuns the light,
 And such was Renard's evil plight,
 That to the court no more he came,
 Where he did bear so ill a name.*—Morrell.

18. JACOB VAN MAERLANT is the father of the Dutch Poets. He was born at Damme in Flanders, A. D. 1235, and died in 1300. Maerlant was a layman, and distinguished as a philosopher and orator. He translated several works into Dutch rhyme, such as The Beauties of Aristotle, of which

20. In power, extent, and population, Holland soon became the predominant province; and after the Union, the States-General was held at the Hague in this district: hence, the language of Holland became the language of the government, the learned, and the press—in short, the arbiter of what was to be considered true Dutch, and it is therefore often denominated Hollandsche taal or Hollandsch.

21. MELIS STOKE began his "Rijmkronijk," or "Poetical Chronicle," before the year 1296, perhaps about 1283, as it was dedicated to Count Floris the Fifth, who died in 1296.* This Chronicle was published in 1591, and again in 3 vols. 4to. 1772, by Huydecoper, with valuable notes. This last is by far the best edition.†

24. THE LIFE OF JESUS, an interesting and a very useful harmony of the Gospels, most probably formed from the Vulgate, as the parables and other parts are in Dutch prose, and almost a literal Dutch translation from the Latin of this celebrated version. This early Harmony of the Gospels must be interesting to divines, while the philologist will rejoice at the discovery of this pure specimen of ancient Teutonic. The MS., written on one hundred and two leaves of coarse parchment, was preserved in the Abbey of St. Trond, and presented to Dr. Meijer, in 1828, while he was Professor in the University of Louvain. It is the opinion of his friend, Professor F. J. Mone, and of Mr. Willems of Ghent, as well as his own, that this MS. is a composition of the latter part of the 13th century. It was published with the following title:

Het Leven van Jesus.—Een Nederlandsch Handschrift uit de dertiende eeuw, met taalkundige aantekeningen, voor het eerst, uitgegeven door G. J. Meijer, Hoog-leeraar te Groningen.—Te Groningen bij J. Oomkens, 8vo. 1835, pp. 431.

A very short specimen from the parable of the sower will be sufficient.

Een sayere ghinc ut sayen syn saet. en also hi sayde so uil som dat saet neuen den weghe. Aldar wardt vertorden. en de voghele quamen en stent op. (Chap. 89, p. 77, l. 9.)

25. SPIEGEL ONSER BEHOUDENISSE. This is one of the first books printed at Haarlem by Laurens Janszoon Koster; it is in the old German character, and in a quarto form, consisting of sixty-two pages. The printing is only on one side of the leaf, the blank sides being pasted together, and the pages are without numbers. Many of the letters stand out of their connexion, and irregularly in the lines. The book has not any title, but its object is to illustrate Scripture history by means of woodcuts. It is without date, but supposed to have been printed about the year 1424. The introductory sentence will be an interesting specimen of the Dutch language about the time when it was printed:

SPIEGEL ONSER BEHOUDENISSE.

He was also so eminent a prose writer as to obtain the appellation of the Tacitus of Holland.

32. HUIG DE GROOT, better known by his Latinised name Hugo Grotius, was born at Delft in 1583. He had extraordinary and precocious talents, and was a zealous Arminian. Grotius was one of those whose influence excited some of that universal attention to religion so prevalent in Holland. When imprisoned at Loevesteyn, he wrote his most celebrated poem in Dutch, "Bewijs van de ware Godsdienst," Evidences of the true Religion.* Though he was one of the most learned men Holland ever produced, and is deservedly eulogised for his critical as well as for his historical writings, his reputation as a poet is not very great. One short specimen is given from the conclusion of his Evidences.

 I've loved thee thro' all change—thy good and evil days—
 And love, and still will love, till life itself decays.

33. DIRK RAFAEL CAMPHUYSEN, a disciple of the famous Arminius, was a native of Gorkum, born in 1586, and died in 1626. He wrote a paraphrase on the Psalms, and much religious poetry. One of the most popular pieces of the Dutch poets is Camphuysen's "May Morning."

Wat is de Meester wijs en goed,
 Die alles heeft gebouwt,
 En noch in wezen blijven doet:
 Wat's menschen oog aanschouwt.

* Better known in England by its Latin title, De Veritate Religionis Christianae. He wrote this work in Dutch verse for fishermen, and sailors on long voyages. The Rev. J. Halbertsma says, "I have often heard old Friesian sailors reciting whole pages from this book. Grotius was afterwards induced by the learned to translate it into Latin, and it has been since translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and I believe into Arabic."

Ach ! waren alle Menschen wijs,
En wilden daar bij wel !
De Aard' waar haar een Paradijs,
Nu is ze meest een Hel.

Stichtelyke Rymen, 1727, p. 639.

What love, what wisdom, God displays
On earth, and sea, and sky,
Where all that fades and all that stays
Proclaim his Majesty !

Ah ! were the human race but wise,
And would they reason well,
That earth would be a paradise,
Which folly makes a hell.

A line is often quoted from his Lawful Amusement, [Spels Mate]:

'T is wel, goedheys fonteyn, 't is wel al wat gy doet.

Fountain of goodness Thou—and all thou dost is well.

34. JOOST VAN DEN VONDEL was born in 1587, and lived to the age of ninety-one. He is the Dutch Shakspeare in his Tragedies: his "Lucifer" is one of the finest poems in the language, and is compared to Milton's "Paradise Lost."

36. As the chief object of this short account of the Dutch language and literature is philological, to show the close analogy between all the Teutonic languages, especially in their earliest form, very little of more recent literature can with propriety be introduced; but the 17th century is so splendid an era, that a few remarks and extracts must be excused in this period, and even one or two in the 18th and 19th centuries. In the 17th century, Holland had its heroes in De Ruiter and Tromp: its statesmen in Barneveldt and the De Wits. Its learned writers are Huig de Groot [Grotius], Daniel and Nicolaas Heins [Heinsius], P. Schryver [Schrivierus], John Frederick Groenhof [Gronovius], Casper van Baerle [Barlæus], Gerard Vos [Vossius],* and many other eminent classics. For science, Huygens, Leeuwenhoek, Ruysch, Tulp, Swammerdam. For its painters, it had Rubens, Van Dyk, Rembrandt, Mierevelt, the Teniers, the Van de Veldes, Jordaans, Kuyp, the Ostades, Gerard Douw, Mieris, John and Philip Wouwerman, Metsu, Berchem, Paul Potter, Pynaker, the Ruysdaels, Van Huysem, Wynants, Steen; and during this period the Universities at Groningen in 1614, Utrecht in 1636, and Gelderland, 1648, and the celebrated school at Amsterdam in 1629,† were established. "The age of which we speak," says the learned Professor Siegenbeek, "and more especially the earlier part of it, was, in every point of view, so glorious to the Dutch nation, that it would be difficult to discover, in the history of any other people, a period of such resplendent fame and greatness."‡

37. "JACOBUS BELLAMY, born at Flushing in 1757, after gaining much applause, died at Utrecht at the early age of twenty-nine.§ A ballad of his [Roosje] is perhaps the most touchingly told story which the Dutch possess. It is of a maid—a beloved maid—born at her mother's death—bred up amidst the tears and kisses of her father—prattling thoughtlessly about her mother—every one's admiration for beauty, cleverness, and virtue—gentle as the moon shining on the downs. Her name was to be seen written again and again on the sands by the Zealand youths—and scarcely a beautiful flower bloomed but was gathered for her. Now in Zealand,

§ Some of the beautiful little poems of van Alphen ought to be given, but want of room will only admit of a short eulogy from the pen of Dr. Bowring. "Van Alphen's Poems for Children (Gedichtjes voor de Jeugd) are among the best that were ever written. They are a precious inheritance for the youth of the Netherlands. They teach virtue in simple eloquence, and are better known in Holland, than are the hymns of Dr. Watts or Mrs. Barbauld here."—Sketch of the Lang. and Lit. of Holland, p. 79.

when the south winds of summer come, there comes too a delicate fish, which hides itself in the sand, and which is dug out as a luxury by the young people. It is the time of sport and gaiety—and they venture far, far over the flat coast into the sea. The boys drag the girls among the waves—and Roosje was so dragged, notwithstanding many appeals. “A kiss, a kiss, or you go further,” cried her conductor—she fled—he followed, both laughing:—“Into the sea—into the sea,” said all their companions; he pushes her on—it is deeper, and deeper—she shrieks—she sinks—they sink together—the sands were faithless—there was no succour—the waves rolled over them—there was stillness and death. The terrified playmates looked—

39. The services of Professor Siegenbeek, in restoring and remodelling the Dutch language, have been so highly estimated by his country, that his system of Orthography obtained the sanction of the Dutch government in 1806. Since this time, for the sake of uniformity in expressing words, it is required that every public document should be written in strict accordance with the Professor's orthographical system.

40. A free translation of the whole Scriptures, in the modern Dutch style and orthography, was made by the learned and eloquent Professor van der Palm, of Leyden. It was published in 4to. in 1825; and, though it has not the sanction of the States-General, nor is it adopted in the churches, it is greatly esteemed, and in general use. The following extract may serve as a specimen.

* Though living authors scarcely come within the scope of this work, Tollens cannot be omitted. He is styled, "the most agreeable, the most popular living poet of Holland." An edition of ten thousand copies of three volumes of his poetry was promptly sold among a population of no more than three millions of people. This itself is no small praise, and implies no small merit, to have so happily touched the feelings of an entire nation. His power is descriptive, his characteristic is originality.—See more in Dr. Bowring's Sketch, p. 98.

En een ander deel viel in de goede aarde, en bragt vrucht voort, die uitbottede en opwies; en het een droeg dertig, en het andere zestig, en het andere honderd.

41. The established version of the Scriptures, made according to the regulations of the Synod of Dort, 1618-1619, and first published at Leyden in 1637, had its orthography modernised, according to the system of Professor Siegenbeek, by the Rev. Henry Cats, minister of the Dutch Reformed Church at Leyden. Mr. Cats dying before the work was completed, it was finished by Professor van Hengel, and published in 4to. by Thieme of Arnhem, in 1834. The same passage is selected as in the last paragraph, for facility of comparison with Professor van der Palm's translation, and with the old orthography in the 34th paragraph.

42. It is difficult to pass over many of the fine passages to be found in Feith's Old Age, [Ouderdom]; The Grave, [Het Graf], &c.; Helmers's Dutch Nation, [Hollandsche Natie], &c.; and also in the works of many of the old as well as the modern Dutch poets. It would be gratifying to name their divines, philosophers, and those numerous individuals excelling in science and literature; but even a list of their names would far exceed the limits of this brief sketch. A reference can therefore, only be made to those, who have professedly treated the subject more fully.* Enough has been probably advanced to prove that Holland has cast more than her share into the intellectual treasury of the world, and this must suffice for the present.

Dutch Dialects.

43. There are several dialects of the Dutch language, such as the Flemish, the Gelderic, &c. The Friesic need not be here named, as the peculiarities of the country and town Friesic are both pointed out and compared with Anglo-Saxon in IV. page xxxv.

* See note to § 1, page xci.

44. The modern Flemish dialect, according to Mr. J. F. Willems,* is distinguished from the Dutch,—First, by a too far-fetched inclination to express the distinctions and shades of all varying sounds and significations of words, united with a careful endeavour to preserve in the pronunciation the radical syllable. For this reason the Flemings not only double the long e and o, but when doubled they also accentuate them, as éé, eê, and oo. They endeavour, in all inflections of words, constantly to write ae or ee, as plaegen to plague; verdraegen, beklagen, neemen, geëven, graeven; from plaeg plague, verdraegt he agrees, klaegt he complains. They also try to distinguish, by orthography, all words of the same sound, but different in signification; as, wagen to hazard, waegen to weigh, leven life, leeven to live. They distinguish compound words by always uniting them with a hyphen, as spraak-konst, grond-word, haeg-appel-boom, aen-nemen, aen-te-nemen.

Secondly.—The long sound of the vowels a, e, i, and u, is expressed by immediately adding an e in syllables where the vowel is followed by a consonant. Some words are exceptions; as, vader father; nader nearer; vergaderen to gather; kamer chamber; averechts preposterous; where the single vowel is considered as sufficient. The y is considered a real vowel, and thus the Flemings have a vowel more than the Dutch. The o is not lengthened by the additional e. These two letters are pronounced short, like the French ou, or the German u.

Thirdly.—By the particular pronunciation of the ei or eê in beër, Dut. bier beer; peërd, Dut. paard a horse; peërel, Dut. paarel or parel a pearl; geërne, Dut. gaarne, gaarn willingly, readily; rechtveêrdig, Dut. regtvaardig righteous, just; weërd, Dut. waard dear. To this pronunciation the Dutch object, and call it the blaetende, bleating sound, though in reality it appears to be the true pronunciation of the Low-Saxon.

The modernised Flemish version of the extract from Reinaert de Vos will serve as a specimen.†

45. The dialect of Gelderland will be sufficiently illustrated by the following extract, which will serve both as a specimen and an explanation of its peculiarities. Slichtenhorst, the writer, lived in the 16th century.

(Dialect of Gelderland.)

No dialect of the Netherlands comes nearer to the German mother-tongue than that of Gelderland, which is singularly strong, and pronounces the words fully, except where the inhabitants border the provinces of Utrecht or Holland, who have a blunter dialect than those of the interior. For where we here (in Gelderland) say, golt gold, holt wood, zolt salt, the others use gout, hout, zout, pronouncing the words according to the French, who, particularly in words derived from the Latin, either melt (soften) or entirely omit the letter l, as in hault altus high, assault, and more that may be found.

VII.—THE GOTHs.*

1. The Goths were of Asiatic origin, and it is supposed that they formed a part of the second wave of European population. Many centuries before our era the Goths must have been in Europe, though Pytheas,† the famous navigator born at Marseilles, is the first who

* That great pains have been taken to give an accurate and succinct account of the Goths and their literature, will be evident, when it is known that, besides many alterations, this short and still imperfect abstract has been transcribed four times. A large volume might easily have been written; the difficulty has been in attempting to give a clear epitome. Those who wish for further information may consult "Historia Gothorum, Vandalorum, et Langobardorum ab Hug. Grotio, partim versa, partim in ordinem digesta. Præmissa sunt ejusdem prolegomena, ubi Regum Gothorum ordo et chronologia cum elogiis. Accedunt nomina appellativa, et verba Gothica, Vandalica, Longobardica, cum explicatione. Amstelodami, 1655, in gr. 8vo." This is an invaluable work. See also the works cited in the following abstract. There is an article which deserves attention in Schilter's Thesaurus, vol. iii. p. 395, sub voce Gothæ.

† Strabo I. 23.

mentions them by name. Strabo* assures us, that Pytheas, about 325 before Christ, undertook a voyage to explore the amber coasts in the Baltic. He sailed to Thule, probably Tellemark on the west borders of Norway, then turned southward and passed the cape of Jutland, and proceeded eastward along the coasts of the Guttones and Teutones. If credit be given to this account of Pytheas, the Goths, at this early period, had extended far over Europe, and had arrived on the coast of the Baltic. We know, upon the better authority of Tacitus,† who wrote with great precision towards the end of the first century in the christian era, that in his time the Goths were near the mouth of the Vistula.

2. According to the opinion of many Scandinavian antiquaries, the Goths who overran the Roman empire, came from Scandinavia or Sweden;‡ but Tacitus§ speaks of no Goths in Scandinavia, and only of Suiones, which is the same name that the Swen-skar (Swedes) apply to themselves at the present day. It is therefore more probable, as some learned Swedes|| acknowledge, that when the Goths wandered towards the west and south, some of them, in early times, crossed the Baltic and established themselves in the south of Sweden and the island of Gothland.¶ We know from Tacitus, just cited, that the Goths were in * Strabo, the Greek geographer, who died about A.D. 25, is the chief writer recording particulars and giving quotations from the lost works of Pytheas. Strabo I. 63; II. 114.—Pliny also mentions Pytheas, Nat. Hist. xxxvii. 2; iv. 13.

† Annal. II. 62; De Mor. Ger. 43.

‡ They support their assertion by the traditions of Jornandes. Cassiodorus, the learned minister of Theodoric, the Gothic king of Italy in the 6th century, was the first who attempted to write a history of the Goths. This history consisted of twelve books, compiled from old chronicles and songs. The work of Cassiodorus is lost, and all that remains is an imperfect abridgment by Jornandes, (Jornandes de Getarum sive Gothorum Origine, et rebus gestis, ad Castalium, cap. 3, 4, 13, &c., Leyden, 1595, 8vo.; Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. 10) bishop of Ravenna, who states that the Goths were from Scandinavia, or the present Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. They traced the genealogies of their hereditary princes up to the race of Odin, called Æsir, [æsir pl. of the Icel. ás an Asiatic; vir Asiaticus,—Jornandes, 3, &c.; Ynglinga Saga. Wheaton Hist. p. 110.] or Asiatic Odin, and his followers are supposed to have come from the banks of the Tanais or Don. At the present day we find in Sweden, East, West, and South Gothland, and the island near the east coast of Sweden is still called Gothland. From the south of Sweden the Goths crossed the Baltic, and settled on the coast of Prussia, about the mouth of the Vistula. We are informed by some fragments of Pytheas, that he, being in search of the amber coasts, sailed about 6,000 stadia along the coasts of the Guttones and Teutones, through the gulph of Mentonomon [Kattegat, Belt, &c.] to Baltia, the Baltic. (Plin. Hist. Nat. xxxvii. 2; iv. 13; Wackher's Gloss. Ger. Pref. § XLV.) About the time of the Antonines, A.D. 180, [Ptolemy II.] from some unknown cause or other, the Goths, in vast hordes, leaving the mouth of the Vistula, and other parts, followed the course of this river, and migrated to the northern coast of the Black Sea: hence they made inroads into the Roman empire. In this way Gibbon, following Jornandes, brings the Goths in contact with the Romans.—See Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. 10.

¶ In the preface to "Historisch Antiquarische Mittheilungen," published by the Copenhagen Royal Society of Northern Antiquities, it is said, that "The Goths were found not only in Scandinavia, but Germany; they are, therefore, properly designated by Gotho-Germans (Gotho-Germanen). The old northern Sagas acknowledge that Odin and his Asas first occupied and peopled Saxony, Westphalia, and different other German provinces, before they founded their government in Denmark and Sweden."—Pref. p. iii. 1835.

Pomeralia and Prussia, near the Vistula, about A.D. 80, and in the time of the Antonines, A.D. 180. The Vandals and Burgundians are considered as belonging to this race. After conquering different smaller nations in the east of Germany and the present Poland, the Goths, sword in hand, opened themselves a way to the Lower Danube. They took possession of all the northern coasts of the Black Sea, and made inroads into the neighbouring countries, particularly into Dacia, where they settled, and divided themselves into the East and West Goths.* The Visi-Gothi, Visigoths, or, as Jornandes calls them, Vesegothæ, and others Wisigothi or West-Goths, had their name from their western situation. For the same reason the East-Goths were denominated Ostro, or Austro-Gothi.

3. The Goths having conquered and occupied the country on the north of the Black Sea, where, according to Herodotus, the Scythians had dwelt, were often called Scythians by Greek and Roman writers, to the great confusion of history.

4. The West-Goths must have been numerous on the west of the Black Sea, and have made inroads into the Roman empire, as we find them so powerful in Thracia in the time of Decius, A.D. 250, that they took and sacked Philippolis.† Even before this period, about A.D. 180, these Goths had so far increased as to occupy Dacia, the present Transylvania, Moldavia, Wallachia, and Bessarabia.

5. The Getæ, a Thracian race, who had previously inhabited Dacia, were, with the Romans still remaining in the country, amalgamised with their conquerors, the West-Goths. As the East-Goths had been confounded with the Scythians, their predecessors, so there are some who suppose that the West-Goths and the Getæ were the same nation, because they found these Goths occupying the same territory, formerly inhabited by the Getæ. Jornandes, by birth a Goth, probably with the view of exalting his nation by attributing to them all that was done by the Getæ, makes the Goths and the Getæ to be the same people. Had he only been guided by the languages of these nations, he would have seen that the Getæ must have a different origin to the Goths.‡

6. When the West-Goths settled in Dacia, they not only found remnants of Roman civilisation, but Christianity established.§ The mild but powerful influence of the christian religion soon prevailed over their cruel heathen rites; for as early as the Council of Nice, in A.D. 325, the ‡ Herodotus, Strabo, and Menander who was a Getian by birth, and many others, declare that the Getæ were of Thracian origin. Stephanus of Byzantium says expressly "Γετία, ἡ χώρα τῶν Γετῶν. Strabo declares that the Getæ and Thracians spoke the same language, and that the Thracian and the Gothic or Old-German are quite distinct languages. See Zahn, p. 4, note a. In Adelung's Geschichte der Deutschen there is a long list of Thracian words, not one of which has the least resemblance to German, p. 284—290.

christian Goths had their bishop, Theophilus, whose signature appears in the records of this celebrated council. The Ostro or Eastern Goths, having no such advantages, remained for a long time heathens. In the latter part of the 4th century, the whole of the Goths were governed by Ermaneric, one of their greatest conquerors, who subdued the western nations, and extended his empire from the river Don, through Sarmatia to the Vistula, and even to the Baltic.

7. The Visigoths or West-Goths being greatly oppressed by the Huns from the north of China or Tartary, induced Ulphilas,* their bishop, to implore the protection of the Roman emperor, Valens, in A.D. 376. He pleaded their cause successfully, and the province of Moesia was assigned to them; their innumerable tribes were then permitted to pass over the Danube.† It was from the residence which Valens gave them in Moesia, now Servia and Bulgaria, south of the Danube, that the Visigoths obtained the name of Moeso-Goths. Considering themselves oppressed in Moesia, the Goths revolted, gained several victories over the Romans, and at last under Alaric desolated the Illyrian provinces, and in A.D. 409 took and pillaged Rome. In 412 they established themselves in the south of France, and crossing the Pyrenees, fixed the seat of their empire in Spain, where they reigned nearly three hundred years. They were first weakened by the Franks, and finally subdued by the Saracens.

8. The Ostro or East-Goths, though they applied to Valens, were not permitted to enter Moesia, and were therefore subjugated by the Huns; but after liberating themselves, they embraced Christianity, and were received into Pannonia in A.D. 456, following the Visi or West-Goths into Moesia. The emperor Theodoric the Great, the hero of this nation, conquered Italy, and in A.D. 493 became the founder of a new monarchy at Ravenna. The Gothic government continued in Italy till the year 554, when it was terminated by Belisarius and Narsus under Justinian, emperor of the east. Cassiodorus,‡ the minister of Theodoric, wrote a history of the Goths, which was abridged by his secretary Jornandes.

* This name has great variety in its orthography: we find Ulphilas, Urphilas, Urphilus, Gilfulas, Gudillas, Galfilas, Gulfilas, Ulphias, Ulpias, Gulflas, Hulflas, Wulfla, &c. It is written אולפילאס Aulpilas by R. Abraham in his work entitled שלמי חבנריים. It is inflected nom. Ulphilas; g. Ulphilæ, exactly as Æneas, Æneæ, &c. after the Greek form Ουλφίλας (Socrates' Hist. Eccles. II. 41; IV. 33; Theodoret. IV. 33; Epist. 104; Philost. II. 5; Sozomen Hist. Eccles. VI. 37.) Some of the most eminent German scholars have recently adopted a new orthography, or as they affirm, reverted to the old Teutonic spelling, and write it Ulfla from Wulfla a little wolf, formed from Moes. wulfs a wolf, (Mt. vii. 15,) in the same manner as magula puerulus, (Jn. vi. 9,) from magus puer, and the diminutive fiskila pisciculus, from the root fisk piscis. (Grimm's Deut. Gramm. vol. iii. p. 666). This, according to the Moeso-Gothic idiom, appears quite correct as it regards the termination; but if a close adherence to the Moeso-Gothic word be followed, it ought to be as precise in the commencement as in the termination, and to be written Wulfla, not Ulfla. Rather than adopt the new mode, which appears incorrect in this particular, the old spelling is here retained, and the word is written Ulphilas Ουλφίλας, as received from the Greek ecclesiastical historians. Cazier, in his Deutsche For und Zunnamen, thinks that Ulfla, Hulflas, &c. has some affinity with A.-S. ulph: Plat. hūlp: Dut. hulp: Ger. hülfe: Old-Ger. hilfa: Dan. hjælp: Swed. hjälp: Icel. hiálp—all denoting help, aid, assistance. Then, with the addition of the diminutive ila, we have Hulpila, or Ulfla a little help, infantine aid.

14. Knittel, Archdeacon of Wolfenbittel, in the Dutchy of Brunswick, found a palimpsest † manuscript of the 8th century, containing part of the 11th and following chapters, as far as the 13th verse of the xvth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, in Gothic and Latin.

This document is denominated Codex Carolinus, from Charles, Duke of Brunswick, who enabled Knittel to give his work to the world. He published it in twelve plates, 4to. 1761.‡ Republished by Ihre in Roman characters, with Latin version, notes, index, &c. pp. 90, Upsal, 1763. Again, by Manning, in the Appendix to his edition of Lye's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, 2 vols. folio, 1772. And by Büsching, Berlin, 4to. 1773.

15. Angelo Mai, while keeper of the Ambrosian Library at Milan, discovered some fragments of Gothic in palimpsest manuscripts, and, with Count Castiglione, published the following extracts:—

Esdras ii. 28—42; Nehem. v. 13—18; vi. 14—19; vii. 1—3; Mt. xxv. 38—46; xxvi. 1—3; 65—75; xxvii. 1: Philip. ii. 22—30; iii. 1—16: Titus i. 1—16; ii. 1:

* A more circumstantial description of both these documents is given in Zahn's preface, p. 77, 78, and in the following works:—Versuch einer Erläuterung der Gothischen Sprachüberreste in Neapel und Arezo als eine Einladungsschrift und Beilage zum Ulphilas, von J. C. Zahn, Braunschweig, 1804. Antonius Franciscus Gorius was the first who, in the year 1731, published the document of Arezzo in the following work: J. B. Doni Inscriptiones antiquæ nunc primum editæ notisque illustratæ, &c. ab A. F. Gorio, Florent. 1731, folio. Professor H. F. Massman observes, that, notwithstanding the most minute investigation, he has not been able to discover the Gothic document of Arezo. (Preface to the Gothic Commentary on St. John, p. x.) It is, however, copied in No. 117 of Gaetano Marini's Papiri Diplomatici, &c. Romæ, 1805, folio, from the original attributed to A.D. 551, and again published in Codice diplomatico Toscano dal antiquario Brunetti, 11, p. 209—213, Firenze, 1833, 4to.

‡ Friedrich Adolph Ebert, late librarian of the King of Saxony, has declared, after having collated it in the most minute manner, that this edition is the most correct copy of the MS. For want of sale many copies were used as waste paper, and the copper-plates were sold for old copper: it is therefore become very scarce. See Allgemeines bibliographisches Lexicon von F. A. Ebert, vol. ii. p. 992, Leipzig, F. A. Broekhaus, 1830, 4to.

Philém. i. 11—23;—A page from a Homily—A fragment of a Gothic Calendar. He concludes his small volume with a Glossary and two plates. The Gothic fragments are accompanied with a Latin version, and in the parts taken from the Scriptures the Greek text is given. This work was published with the following title :—Ulphilæ partium ineditarum in Ambrosianis Palimpsestis ab Angelo Maio repertarum specimen conjunctis curis ejusdem Maii et Caroli Octavii Castillionæi editum, Mediolani, 4to. 1819, pp. 1—36, Pref. xxiv.*

16. Count Castiglione again proved his zeal for Gothic literature by publishing—

Ulphilæ Gothica versio, epistolæ Divi Pauli ad Corinthios secundæ quam ex Ambrosianæ Bibliothecæ palimpsestis depromptam cum interpretatione adnotationibus, glossario edidit Carolus Octavius Castillionæus, Mediolani, 4to. 1829.

17. Count Castiglione, rather than increase suspense by delay, most generously determined to satisfy at once the anxious wishes of the learned world, by publishing the text of the following work without preface or glossary :—

Gothicæ versionis epistolarum Divi Pauli ad Romanos, ad Corinthios primæ, ad Ephesios, quæ supersunt ex Ambrosianæ Bibliothecæ palimpsestis deprompta cum adnotationibus edidit Carolus Octavius Castillionæus, Mediolani, Regiis typis, 1834, 4to. p. 64.

18. A commentary on parts of the Gospel according to St. John, written in Moeso-Gothic, has been published in Germany by Dr. H. Massmann, from a MS. in the Vatican.

It is a 4to. vol. of 182 pages, to which is prefixed a dedication and an account of the manuscript, in 17 pages. Then follow 34 pages of two columns in a page of the Commentary in Moeso-Gothic, printed in facsimile types. Immediately afterwards is given in 15 pages the same Moeso-Gothic, text in Roman type, in one column, and a literal Latin version in the other, with notes at the foot of the page. Then succeed an account of the proposed emendations of the MS., a short notice of the life of Ulphilas, and a complete Glossary of all the Moes. words not only in the text of the Commentary, but those found in Castiglione's extracts from St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, first of Corinthians, and the Ephesians mentioned in the last paragraph. At the end is a copper-plate containing several facsimiles of MSS.† The full title of the work is, *Skeirein's Aiwaggeljons thairh Johannen: Auslegung des Evangelii Johannis in gothischer Sprache. † A new edition of all that is discovered of Ulphilas's translation of the Scriptures is advertised to appear in the course of this year, with this title: Ulphilas, vet. et novi test. versionis Goth. fragmenta quæ supersunt—cum glossario et grammatica, edid. H. C. de Gabelitz et Dr. J. Loebe, 2 tom. 4to. maj. Altenburgi, Schnuphase. See Allgemeines Verzeichniss der Bücher der Frankfurter und Leipziger Oster-messe, 1836, p. 261. In a critique inserted in the Göttinger gelehrte Anzeigen, it is mentioned that the celebrated philologist, Prof. Jacob Grimm, has been long preparing a complete edition of all the fragments of Ulphilas's version of the Bible. The original text is to be printed in the Latin character.

19. With the extinction of the Gothic dynasties, this pure and rich German tongue, though vestiges still remain, ceased to be a prevailing dialect. Like the Scandinavian branches, the Gothic retained a distinct form for the passive voice. The Scandinavians, having little interruption from other nations, would most likely retain their grammatical forms much longer than the southern German tribes, who (from the 4th century, when the Moeso-Gothic Gospels were written, to the 8th, when we find the nearest earliest specimen of German) must have lost many of the old forms, and with them probably the passive voice.

VIII.—THE ALEMANNI OR SUABIANS.

1. There are various opinions about the derivation of the word Alemanni. It was a name given to the Suabians,* who appear to have come from the shores of the Baltic to the southern part of Germany. The locality of the Suabians is, in some measure, confirmed by the ancient name of the Baltic, Mare Suevicum, Suavian, or Suabian Sea. In the beginning of the 3rd century, the Suabians assembled in great numbers on the borders of the Roman empire, between the Danube, Rhine, and Main,† and united with other tribes. To denote this coalition or union of various nations, they were called Alemanni various men, all men.

* Schwaben (Suavi) according to Schmitthenner, Schwabe, m. pl. Schwaben, in Old High-Ger. Suab, pl. Suaba, and signifies the wise, the intelligent, a person full of understanding and discernment, from the Old High-Ger. sueban to perceive, understand, know, discern, comprehend.

† Walafrius Strabo de Vita B. Galli apud Goldastum, tom. I. rer. Alemann. p. 143: Igitur quia mixti Alemanni Suevi partem Germaniæ ultra Danubium, partem Retiæ inter Alpiem et Histriam, partemque Galliarum circa Ararim obsederunt.—Jornandes de rebus Geticis cap. iv.: Theodemir Gothorum rex emenso Danubio, Suevis improvisus a tergo apparuit. Nam regio illa Suevorum ab oriente Baiobaros habet, ab occidente Francos, a meridie Burgundiones, a septentrione Thuringos. Quibus Suevis tunc juncti Alemanni etiam adierunt ipsique alpes erectas omnino regentes.

‡ Ger. allerley various, different: mann man. Schmitthenner says from the Old-Ger. alamann each, in the plural alamanna many, a nation, community.—Von Schmid in his Suabian Dictionary, sub Alb, alp, informs us that alm, almand, or almand, denoted not only a common pasture, but a mountain; hence the people dwelling on the mountains in Austria, Tyrol, Thus increased in power, they soon ventured to make formidable inroads into the Roman territory, and not only entered the plains of Lombardy, but advanced almost in sight of Rome. They were repelled, and, in a new attack, vanquished by Aurelian.* The term Alemanni was used by foreigners as synonymous with Germans,† and, while in English they are called Germans, in French and Spanish they are to this day denominated Alemans. This great confederacy terminated in A.D. 496, by a bloody victory of the Francic king, Clovis (Chlodovæus), at Tolbiac, near Cologne on the Rhine, the present Zulich or Zulpich.

2. The peculiarities of the Suabian or Alemannic dialect are these:

The first vowel a very much prevails, and the final n of verbs is omitted: thus they say, saga for sagen to say; fraga for fragen to ask. They change the Ger. o into au, and use braut for brot bread; grauss for gross great. For the Ger. st, they put scht (sht); they use du bischt, kannscht, for du bist thou art; kannst canst. They form diminutives in li, le, as herzli for Ger. herzchen a little heart. In the inflections of sollen shall, wollen will, the l is generally omitted; as, du sottascht di doch schema, for du solltest dich doch schâmen thou shouldst be ashamed. The oldest Suabian and Upper German dialect contained very few rough hissing sounds. In old documents, and till the time of Emperor Maximilian I. the sch is rarely found. The hissing sounds begin on the borders of Italy and France, diminish in the middle of Germany, and nearly disappear in North or Low-Germany.

3. The Suabians of the present day speak in a lively and quick manner.

4. The Alemannic or Suabian dialect prevails in the north of Switzerland, in Alsace, Baden, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, and the western part of the Austrian States.

5. Some of the authors who are generally said to have written in Alemannic, and some of the early compositions in this dialect, are—

An exhortation to Christians, A.D. 720 (x. 2).—Kero, A.D. 800 (x. 7).—Rhabanus Maurus, A.D. 850 (x. 11).—Otfrid, A.D. 860 (x. 12).—Notker, A.D. 1020 (x. 16).—Nibelungen Lied, A.D. 1150 (x. 24).—Walter von der Vogelweide, A.D. 1190 (x. 25).—Chunrad von Kirchberg, A.D. 1195 (x. 26).—Gotfrit von Nifen, A.D. 1235 (x. 29).—Schwaben-Spiegel, A.D. 1250 (x. 31), &c.

IX.—THE FRANCS.

1. The Franks,* or Freemen, were a confederacy of high-spirited and independent German tribes, dwelling between the Rhine and Elbe. They were composed of the Tencteri, Catti, Sali, Bructeri, Chamavi, Chauci, &c. who occupied the modern Prussian provinces on the Rhine, Zwey-Brücken or Deux-Ponts, part of Hesse, the south of Saxony, and the northern part of Bavaria. The Franks lying to the north-east were called Salian Franks from the river Sala, and those on the Rhine were, from their situation, denominated Riparian Franks.

2. This confederation was known, under the denomination of Franks, about A.D. 240.† According to Schilter,‡ the Franks were first mentioned by Eumenius, a Latin orator, born at Autun in France, at the beginning of the 4th century. They had been harassed by the Romans; and having felt the importance of union for self-defence, they, when united, soon discovered not only an ability to resist their enemies, but in turn to invade some of the Roman territories. In the beginning of the 5th century they took possession of the west bank of the Rhine, and began to make incursions into Gaul.

3. About A.D. 420, their power extended from the Rhine nearly over the whole of Gaul, and they founded the Merovingian dynasty, under Pharamond their king, who, according to their custom, was elected by the chiefs of the nation, constituting the Francic confederacy. The Merovingian line continued for 323 years through a succession of twenty-two kings, from A.D. 428 to 751. One of the Merovingian kings, Clodwig, Chlothovecus, Clovis, Ludewig, or Lewis, subdued the Alemanni in A.D. 496; and, immediately after this conquest, he and many of his subjects made a public profession of the Christian faith by being baptized at Rheims.

4. After the Merovingian succeeded the Carolingian family, which supplied eleven kings, who held the reins of the Francic government for 236 years; then succeeded in France the Capetian line, which needs not be further noticed, as it would lead to a history of France beyond the object of this notice.

5. Pepin, the first king of the Carolingian race, seized the Francic crown in A.D. 751, and divided the kingdom between his two sons, Charlemagne and Carloman. After the death of his brother, Charlemagne became sole possessor of the kingdom in 768. As some short historical remarks* will be made when specimens of the language are introduced, it will only be necessary to observe here, that Charlemagne, after showing himself one of the greatest men that ever reigned over a most extensive empire, died in A. D. 814.

6. It is difficult to name with minuteness and precision all the writers and the compositions in the Francic dialect; but the following are generally considered as written in this idiom:—

A translation of Isidore, A. D. 800 (x. 8).—Hildibraht and Hadubrant, A. D. 790 (x. 3).—Ludwigialied, A. D. 883 (x. 14).—A Translation of Boethius, A. D. 950 (x. 18).—Willeram's Paraphrase, A. D. 1070 (x. 20).—The Praise of St. Anno, A. D. 1075 (x. 21), &c.

X.—HIGH-GERMAN, OR THE ALEMANNIC, SUABIAN, AND FRANCIC DIALECTS.

1. The translation of the Scriptures by Bishop Ulphilas, about A. D. 360, affords the earliest specimen of German. Almost four centuries elapsed between the writings of Ulphilas, and the composition of the following exhortation. When the Franks and Alemanni were converted to Christianity, their instructors not only wrote prayers, exhortations, sermons, hymns, and commentaries on the Scriptures, but also composed glossaries; thus preserving specimens of the German language in the 7th and 8th centuries.

2. AN EXHORTATION TO CHRISTIANS (exhortatio ad plebem Christianam) is taken from a MS. of the early part of the 8th century, originally preserved in the bishoprick of Freisingen in Bavaria, and Fulde in Hesse, but now in Munich and Kassel. It was published in Hottinger's Historia Ecclesiastica, vol. viii. p. 1220; in B. J. Doen's Miscellaneen, vol. i. p. 4—8; and in Wackernagel's Altddeutsches Lesebuch, 8vo. Basel, 1835.

3. THE HEROIC Song, relating the combat between Hildibraht and Hadubrant. The language of this song is Francic, with a great intermixture of the Low-German dialect. Bouterweck considers it just what one would expect from the attempt of a Low-Saxon to write Francic. Like the Wessobrunn Prayer, it is alliterative,* and ascribed to the 8th century. It was first published by Eckard, in Commentariis de rebus Francorum, vol. i, p. 864, from the Fulda manuscript, now kept at Kassel, by Grimm, at Kassel, 1812, and in his Altdeutsche Wälder, vol. ii. p. 97. A lithographic specimen of the fragment preserved at Göttingen was given by Professor Grimm in 1830. An edition appeared in 1833, by Lachmann. An explanation of the difficult passages by W. Mohr, in 12mo. pp. 16, Marburg, 1836.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Our Lord has given St. Peter power, that he may preserve, the man that prays to him.
 Lord have mercy, Christ have mercy.
 He also keeps, with words, the portals of heaven's kingdom wherein he may take, whom he will preserve.
 Lord have mercy. Christ have mercy.

6. THE WESSOBRUNN PRAYER, so called from the MS. being first discovered in the monastery of Wessobrunn, in Bavaria. The MS. is of the latter part of the 8th century; it was published by Professor J. Grimm at Kassel, 1812, by Massmann at Berlin, 1824, and in Wackernagel's Altd deutsches Lesebuch, 8vo. Basel, 1835. The alliteration is denoted by italic letters.

Thuen wir das, was der Weissager sagt: ich habe gesagt, ich werde bewachen, die Wege mein, dass ich nichts missethue mit meiner Zunge; ich setzte dem Munde mein eine Wache, ich bin verstummt, und gedemüthiget und schweige von den Guten. Heir zeigt der Weissager, wenn von guten Reden oft wegen der Verschwiegenheit soll geschwiegen werden, wie viel mehr von übeln Worten wegen der Strafe der Sünde soll geschwiegen werden.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Let us do what the sayer (Prophet) saith: I have said I will keep my ways, that I nothing misdo with my tongue: I have set a watch over my mouth, I was dumb, and humbled, and silent (even) from good; here the wise-sayer shows, if from good speeches often for taciturnity we should be silent, how much more from evil words should we cease for punishment of the sin.

8. ISIDORE, born at Carthage, was archbishop of Seville, from 600 to 636. Amongst other works, he wrote a treatise, De Nativitate Domini, of which a Franc is supposed to have made a translation. The MS. is preserved at Paris. It was published by Jo. Phil. Palthen, at Greifswald, 1706, and again in Schilter's Thes. at the end of vol. i. Ulm, 1728: it was also inserted by Rostgaard in the Danish Bibliotheca, No. 2, Copenhagen, 1738.

The following specimen of Isidore is from Graff's Althochdeutschen Sprachschatz, vol. i. p. xlv. Berlin, 1834,* most carefully collated by this indefatigable scholar with the original MS. at Paris. It is to be found also in Schilter's Thes. p. 4 of vol. i., Isidore, ch. iv. 1.

Hier wird gesprochen von der bedeutung der Dreieinigkeit Gottes.

Sichtbar ist in den alten bundes büchern, dass Vater und Sohn und heiliger Geist Gott seyn. O der sündigen (thörichten) Juden leute, unglaublich dass Sohn und heiliger Geist Gott seyn, darum weil sie hörten Gottes stimme laut auf dem berge Sinai sprechend: Höre du Israel der Herr dein Gott ist einge Gott.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Here is spoken about the signification of the Trinity of God.

It is visible, in the books of the Old Testament, that the Father and Son and Holy Ghost is God. O the sinful Jewish people, disbelieving that the Son and the Holy Ghost is God, because they heard God's voice loud on mount Sinai, saying, Hear thou, Israel, the Lord thy God is one God.

* In the preface to this laborious and learned work, from p. xxxiii. to lxxiii. there is a very valuable account of old Ger. MSS. Some specimens are given of unpublished glossaries and fragments of a translation of Boetius de consolatione philosophiæ, supposed to be Notker's work (in cod. 5, gall. 825) of Mart. Capella de Nuptiis Mercurii et Philologiæ, (in cod. 5, gall. 872,) and of Aristotle's Organon (in cod. 5, gall. 818). The glossaries are from the 7th to the 9th century. To give a true idea of the quality and state of the MSS. Graff has very properly given them with all their faults, &c. exactly as he found them.

9. CHARLEMAGNE,* who reigned from 768—814, united the German tribes, the Franks, Alemanni, Bavarians, Thuringians, Saxons, Lombards, Burgundians, &c. into one mighty empire, and governed all the nations from the Eider in the north of Germany, to the Ebro in Spain—from the Baltic sea to the Tiber in Italy. Arts and sciences declined more and more after the time of Gregory the Great, in 604, who himself discouraged scientific pursuits so much, that at the time of Charlemagne there was scarcely a trace of science or literature on the continent. Charlemagne arose, and obtained the aid of the most learned men of his time for the improvement of his mighty empire. A few of these eminent men may be named. Alkuin, an Anglo-Saxon monk, born about 732, educated at York, was well versed in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, theology, rhetoric, poetry, and mathematics, and was also distinguished for his piety. He died, abbot of Tours, in 804. Theodulph died 821, bishop of Orleans. Eginhard, born in Odenwalde, South Germany, wrote the History of Charlemagne, and died in 839. Schools were also established in different parts of the empire. By these means science and literature were supported in the 9th and following centuries. Charlemagne enjoined the clergy to preach in German, and to translate homilies into that language. He himself attempted to form a German Grammar, and ordered a collection of the national songs to be made, which unfortunately are lost, but we may form some judgment of them from the Hildibraht, a remarkable fragment of early German.

10. The successors of Charlemagne inherited his empire, but not his talents. The second son of Charlemagne, Ludwig or Lewis the pious, in the year 843, divided the empire among his three sons:—1. Lewis had Germany, which comprised Suabia, East Franconia, Bavaria, Thuringia, Saxony: Germany, from this early period to the present day, has preserved its language, its customs, and independence. 2. To Charles, Gallia was assigned. 3. Lothar received for his portion, Dauphine, Alsace, and Burgundy.

At first the Franks, in Gallia under Charles, spoke German, but they soon mixed it with the language of the subdued Gauls. The oaths which Charles and Lewis and their subjects took near Strasburg in 842, to protect their empire against Lothar, their eldest brother, are preserved. The grandson of Charlemagne, Abbot Nidhart, who died 853, in his history of the disputes of the sons, has preserved the form of the oath in German and French. It is a curious specimen of both languages at this early period.†

Charles's Oath in Francic, or Old German.

In God's love and for the christian folk and our common preservation, from this day henceforth, so far as God gives me wisdom and power, so hold I (shall I preserve) this my brother, so as one (man) by right his brother should (preserve) and that he to me also so may do, and with Lothar I (will) not enter into any thing, with my will, to be an injury to him.

The Oath of Lewis, in the Romanic, or French.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

For God's love and for the christian people and our common preservation from this day and henceforth, in so far as God gives me wisdom and power, so shall I assist this my brother Charles, and in assistance and in any cause so as one (man) by right his brother ought to assist in such a manner as he may do to me; and with Lothar I will not enter into any treaty (placitum) which to me, or to this my brother Charles, can be an injury.

Oath of Charles's army, in Romanic or Old French.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

If Lewis keeps the oath which to his brother Charles he swore, and Charles my Seignior (Lord) on his part does not keep it, if I cannot prevent him, neither I, nor any one whom I can prevent, shall give him any assistance against Lewis.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

If Charles keeps the oath, which he swore (to) his brother Lewis, and Lewis my Lord breaks the (oath) which he swore (to) him, in case I cannot prevent him, (then) neither I, nor any one whom I can prevent, shall give him any assistance against Charles.

11. RHABANUS MAURUS, born at Mayence in 776, became a celebrated teacher at Fulda. His attention was attracted to the German language, and, in a council at Mayence, A.D. 848, he succeeded in passing a canon that in future the clergy should preach in Romanic (French) or Theotisc (German). He died, Archbishop of Mayence, Feb. 4th, 856. Rhabanus Maurus compiled Glossæ Latino barbaricæ de partibus humani corporis Goldast script. rerum Alemannic, vol. i. p. 66—69.—Glossarium Latino Theodiscum in tota Biblia V. et N. Test. Goldast. id.

12. OTFRID belonged to the Alemanni or Suabians, and was educated at Fulda under Rhabanus Maurus. He was a Benedictine monk at Weissenburg in Alsace, a learned theologian, philosopher, orator, and poet, who flourished between 840 and 870. Otfrid wrote in rhyme a poetical paraphrase of the Gospels in Alemannic, his native language, to banish the profane songs of the common people. In this work there is a disregard of chronological order, for the poet seems to have written down the circumstances as they came into his mind. The MS. was first discovered by Beatus Rhenanus in the monastery at Freisingen, near Munich; there are two other MSS., one at Heidelberg, and the other at Vienna. It was first published by Flaccius (Illericus), at Basle, 1571, in Schilter's Thes. vol. i. with Scherz's annotations; also at Bonn in 4to. Bonner Bruchstücke vom Otfrid, durch H. Hoffmann von Fallersleben, 1821. Again in 4to. by E. G. Graff, Königsberg, 1831, under the title of Krist.

 Yet want not any thing, they truly have enough,

13. MUSPILLI, a fragment of an old High-German alliterative Poem on the end of the world, from a MS. of the middle of the 9th century, in the Royal Library at Munich, published by J. A. Schmeller, Munich, 1832.

Thus arranged and corrected by Schmeller.

LITERAL GERMAN.

. . . . Da mag Kein Mage dem anderen

LITERAL ENGLISH VERSION.

. . . . Then may no kindred assist the other for the Muspille. When the broad surface of the earth all is burning, and fire and air are all cast away; where is then the mark about which one has been quarrelling here with his relatives?

14. LUDWIGSLIED, a German heroic song by an unknown author, in praise of the East Francic King Lewis III. in the year A.D. 883. The MS. was originally at St. Amand, near Tournay, but it is now lost. It was published first in Schiller's Thes., then by Docen, Munich, 1813, and in 1835 in Wackernagel's Altdeutsches Lesebuch, 8vo. Basel, p. 46.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Song was sung,
Fight was begun:
Blood shone in the cheeks
Of fighting Franks.

There fought like a hero
Not one so as Lewis,
Quick and bold,
Which was in him inborn.

15. SAXON EMPERORS. During the reign of the Saxon emperors, from 919 till 1024, literature and science made some progress. The Ottoes valued and loved the sciences, and patronised Gerbert the most learned man of their time. Gerbert became pope under the name Silvester II. and died 1003.

16. NOTKER wrote in the period of the Saxon emperors. The only important monument in High-German literature of this age is a translation and commentary on the Psalms by this learned monk, Notker of St. Gallen. He was called Labeo, from his broad lips. His Alemannic translation is free and natural; and, as it respects power and strength of expression, it equals the best modern translation. Notker died in 1022. His work was published in Schiller's Thes. vol. i.

Quando pestis se dilatat, dicitur Pestilentia, i. e. late pervagata pestis.*

17. After the extinction of the Saxon emperors, the line of Salian Franks governed in Germany from A.D. 1024 to 1125. The authors of this period generally wrote in Latin. Adam, called Bremensis, born at Meissen, Canon at Bremen, wrote in Latin a History of the Church which gives an account of Hamburg and Bremen, from the time of Charlemagne to Henry IV. It is of great value for the history of North Germany.

18. GERMAN literature had very few monuments in the time of the Salian Franks: the language is very stiff and mixed with Latin. The few specimens of German, in this period, are translations, such as the version of Boethius and Aristotle, by an unknown monk of St. Gallen, and the paraphrase of Canticum Canticorum by Willeram. E. G. Graff, in his Althochdeutschen Sprachschatz, vol. i. No. I. pref. p. xxxvi. 4to. Berlin, 1834, mentions a St. Gallen MS. of the 10th and 11th century, containing an old High-German translation of Boethius Cons. philos., and gives a specimen of this translation. The following extract is interesting, from the additions which the monk makes to the Latin text of Boethius,* showing the astronomical knowledge of his time.

Boethius.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

We know that the water goes round the earth, and the fourth part above is bare; on it sit the men. The heaven learns (teaches) us that it is the fourth part. All, who know astronomy, confess that the equinoctial zone divides the heaven right in two, and that from it to the uttermost pole of each half is an equal distance, I mean to the north, and to the south. So is the earth round, and it is to us unknown, if it be bare underneath; above, where it is bare, there sit the people from the Ethiopian ocean to the Scythian ocean. The farthest sitting to the south, they sit in Ethiopian islands; to those is the sun over head, when he goes out of Aries in the spring, and when he begins to go into Libra in autumn.

20. WILLERAM was educated at Fulda. He died 1085, abbot of the monastery Ebersberg in Bavaria, and probably composed his Paraphrase between 1070 and 1084. MSS. are preserved at Vienna, Breslaw, Stuttgard, Einsiedeln, published with this title, Willeram Abbatis in Canticum Canticorum paraphrasis, Latina et veteri lingua Francica, ed. P. ## VERBAL ENGLISH VERSION.

Say to me, my beloved, where thou pasturest thy sheep, where thou reatest midday. For what ask I this? That I may not err, nor begin to go among the number of thy companions. Inform me, O bridegroom, whom I love with all might who are the teachers of true faith, who show thy sheep to the pastures of life, and who are such that you make dwellings in their hearts, and shelter them from all heat of temptation.

21. ST. ANNO. The praises of the archbishop of Cologne, St. Anno, who died 1075, concludes this period. The writer is unknown, but the poem was probably composed, soon after St. Anno's death, before the end of the 11th century. It is in rhyme, and consists of forty-nine stanzas, written as Herzog says, in the Low-Rhinish or Francic dialect (Nieder Rhinisch Meusel calls it Alemannic. Fragments of this poem were first published by Martin Opitz, 1639, who discovered them at Breslaw. The MS. is lost. It was printed by Schilter and others, and in 1816 by Goldman. All the latter editions depend on the first incorrect publication.

The flow'rs adorn the fields,	Save the two latest born,
Green leaves bedeck the groves,	Whom noblest, best, he framed;
The beasts their courses run,	They spurn his high command,
Soft rings the sweet bird's song:	And turn to folly's course,

MINNESINGERS.‡

23. German national poetry and prose compositions, from the 12th to the 14th century. The Hohenstauffen or Suabian race of German emperors were great admirers and promoters of literature. Frederic I., Henry VI., Frederic II. and Conrad IV. were themselves poets, as well as the patrons of Minnesingers. A few of the chief Minnesingers and other authors will now be mentioned.

24. The Nibelungen Lied, or Song of the Nibelungen, is one of the most ancient and perfect Suabian epic poems. Pelegrin, bishop of Passau, who died in 991, is supposed to have collected the story of the Nibelungen, and to have written it in Latin by the aid of his scribe Conrad. The present poem is probably founded upon the Latin, and apparently written by Henry of Ofterdingen, about the middle of the 12th century. The following specimen and the English version are from the interesting

Of many a hero there.

30. A NOTICE of the following didactic poems in the old High-German dialect cannot be omitted. 1. Der König Tyrol von Schotten und sein sohn Fridebrant, King Tyrol of Scotland and his son Fridebrant. 2. Der Winsbeke an sinen sun, Winsbeke to his son. 3. Du(i) Winsbekin an ir Tohter, Winsbekin to her daughter. These three are by unknown authors, but they most likely belong to the beginning of the 13th century. They are printed in Schilter, vol. ii.; and in Manesse's Collection. 4. Frigedanks Bescheidenheit, Sentiments and Sentences. Whether Frigedank be the real or fictitious name of the author, is very doubtful. The poem was written before 1230. Published by Sebastian Brand, Strasburg, 1508, 4to., and lately by W. Grimm. These didactic poems, particularly the latter, are distinguished by elevated and philosophical views of life.

LITERAL ENGLISH.

Lord God, heavenly father, by thy kind goodness, createst thou man with threefold dignity.

2. The first is, that he after thee is formed.

3. That is such a great dignity, for which all mankind always particularly shall thank thee, for which we have great right (obligation), much beloved Lord, heavenly father, since thou to thy high Godhead hast so honourably ennobled us.

4. The second dignity to which thou, Lord, almighty Creator, hast formed man, is that thou, all the world, the sun and moon, the stars, and the four elements, fire, water, air, earth, the fowls in the air, the fish in the waves, the animals in the wood, the worms on the earth, gold, silver, and precious stones, and the sweet flavour of costly spices, the shining colour of flowers, the fruit of the trees, corn, and all creatures, hast, the Lord, created for the use and service of man, by the favour and love which thou hadst to man.

5. The third dignity with which thou, Lord, hast ennobled man is this, that man shall enjoy the dignity and honour and pleasure and delight which thou thyself art (hast) always and eternally with thee.

51. The present German language* (Hoch-Deutsch) has a greater affinity to the Alemannic and Francic than to the Platt-Deutsch. This inclination towards the High-German, or southerly branch of the German dialects, arose from the influence of Luther at the Reformation. Luther was Professor of Divinity at Wittenberg, where the high dialect prevailed, and in which he wrote his translation of the Bible. The New Testament first published in 1523, and the Old Testament from 1523 to 1534, was revised and the whole Bible published from 1541 to 1545. This revised translation soon became generally known, and the numerous students that crowded Wittenberg to benefit by the lectures of Luther, and subsequently dispersed into the different provinces, carried with them this High-German version, and a predilection for this dialect. Thus High-German became generally known, and was adopted as the language of the church, the learned, and the press. This tongue spread with the Reformation, and as it advanced in extent it increased in perfection, till it has become one of the most cultivated and extensive of all the Gothic or Teutonic dialects. It not only prevails in the German confederacy, but in the north of Switzerland, Alsace, in a great part of Hungary, Transylvania, Bohemia, the kingdom of Prussia, in Schleswick, part of Jutland, and in Russia as far north as Courland. Amongst the Germans are writers of the first order in every branch of literature and science: they are most prolific in the production of new works, nor can any easily exceed them in freedom of inquiry, in labour, or erudition.

LE. viii.—Es gieng ein Säemann auss seim Hauss,
 Zu säen seinen Samen auss,
 Vnd etlichs fiel an weges gsetn,
 Das wurd gantzlich in staub vertretn,

 Vnd die Vögel vnder dem Himml
 Frassen das auff mit eim gewimbl:
 Auff den Felsen fiel etliches,
 Da es auffgieng verdorret es.

54. THE FROSCHMÄUSELER, oder der Frösch und Mäuse wunderbare Hofhaltung, The court of the frogs and mice, Magdeburg, 1595, 8vo. is one of the most remarkable epic poems. It was written by George Rolenhagen, who was born 1542, at Bernau in Brandenburg, and died 1609, when rector of the Latin school of Magdeburg. He attempts to describe eternity in the following striking allegory.

ETERNITY.

ENGLISH VERSION.

Ewig, Ewig, ist lange Zeit.
Wēr ein Sandberg uns vorgestellt,
Viel grösser denn die gantze Welt,
Und ein Vogel all tausend Iahr kēm,
Auff einmahl nur ein Kornlein nem,
Und Gott uns denn erlösen wolt,
Wenn er das letzte Körnlein holt,
So wēr Hoffnung das uns elende,
Zwar langsam, aber doch het ein ende.
Nun bleiben wir in Gottes Zorn
Ohn all Hoffnung ewig verlorn.

For ever and ever is a long time.
Were a heap of sand before our eyes,
Exceeding the whole world in size,
And a bird ev'ry thousand years should come,
To take but a single grain therefrom,
And God would grant deliverance
When the last grain were taken thence,
We might have hope that our wretched state,
Tho' long, might yet still terminate.
But now beneath God's wrath we lie
Lost, without hope, eternally.

REINEKE DE VOS.

Es war an einem Mayentag,
Wie Blum' und Laub die Knospen brach;
Die Kräuter sprosssten; froh erklang
Im Hain der Vögel Lobgesang;
Der Tag war schön, und Balsamduft
Erfüllte weit umher die Luft;
Als König Nobel, der mächtige Leu,
Ein Fest gab, und liess mit Geschrey
Hoftag verkünden überall.

Da kamen hin mit grossem Schall
Viel edle Herr'n und stolze Gesellen;
Es war kaum möglich sie zu zählen.
Der Kranich Lütke, Matz der Staar

Und Marks der Häher kamen sogar;
Denn Nobel wollte Herr'n und Sassen
Ein frohes Gastmahl feyern lassen;
Darum er alles her berief,
Was ging, was kroch, was flog, was lief,
Thier' und Gevögel, gross und klein,
Bis auf Reinhard den Fuchs allein,
Der sich so frevelhaft benommen,
Dass er nicht durft' nach Hofe kommen.

Wer Böses thut, der scheu't das Licht:
So ging's auch diesem falschen Wicht;
Er hatt' am Hofe schlimmen Geruch,
Drum er zu kommen Bedenken trug.

58. A free High-German translation of Henry van Alkmar's Reineke de Vos by Göethe.

Pfingsten, das liebeliche Fest, war gekommen; Es grünt und blühen
Feld und Wald; auf Hügeln und Höhen, in Büschen und Hecken
Uebten ein fröhliches Lied die neuermunterten Vögel;
Jede Wiese spross von Blumen in duftenden Gründen, Festlich heiter glänzte der Himmel und farbig die Erd.
Nobel, der König, versammelt den Hof; und seine Vasallen
Eilen gerufen herbey mit grossem Gepränge; da kommen Viele stolze Gesellen von allen Seiten und Enden, Lütke, der Kranich, und Markart der Häher und alle die Besten.
Denn der König gedenkt mit allen seinen Baronen
Hof zu halten in Feyer und Pracht; er lässt sie berufen
Alle mit einander, so gut die grossen als kleinen.
Niemand sollte fehlen! und dennoch fehlte der eine,
Reinecke Fuchs, der Schelm! der viel begangenen Frevels
Halben des Hofes sich enthielt. So scheuet das böse Gewissen Licht und Tag, es scheute der Fuchs die versammelten Herren.

XI.—SCANDINAVIAN LITERATURE,* INCLUDING A SKETCH OF THE LANGUAGES OF ICELAND, DENMARK, NORWAY, AND SWEDEN.

1. ICELAND has been supposed to be the remote Thule † of Virgil, Pliny, and other classical authors; but it is more probable, that when they mention Thule, they refer to part of South Norway, probably the province of Tellemark. It is denominated Thyle ‡ by king Alfred in his translation of Boethius, and Thila § in his Orosius. The cluster of islands called Ferros were discovered by Scandinavian navigators at an early period, and in A. D. 861, Naddod, a Norwegian, was driven by storms on the coast of Iceland, which, from the snow, he named Snoeland. Soon after, Gardar Svarfason, a Swede, by circumnavigation, ascertained it to be an island, and named it Gardarsholm, or the island of Gardar;|| it has, however, become generally known by the descriptive name Iceland.¶

2. Harald Hårfager, or the Fairhaired, subduing all the petty kings of Norway, obtained the supreme power about A. D. 863, and continued king of Norway till his death in 934. Some of the independent and high-spirited nobles spurned the usurped authority of Harald, and when, in their deadly feuds, they had slain an adversary, or in some other way broken the laws, rather than submit to Harald, they fled to Iceland, a land of prodigies, where subterraneous fires burst through the frozen soil, and boiling springs shoot up amidst eternal snows; where the powerful genius of liberty, and the no less powerful genius of poetry, have given most brilliant proofs of the energies of the human mind at the remotest confines of animated nature.** Among those who first fled to this land of freedom, we have, in 874, a record of Ingolf, the son of a Norwegian Jarl, Comes, or Earl, and his brother-in-law Hjörleif, who landed on the promontory on the south-east coast, still called Ingolfshödi. In the next century, Thornvald with his son Erik, surnamed Raudi or the red,†† escaped to Iceland. In the space of 50 or 60 years the inhabitable parts of Iceland were occupied by refugees from Norway, who brought with them their families and a numerous retinue of dependants. Here they were amply repaid for their hardships and toil, in this severe clime, by the full enjoyment of liberty and independence; here they imported their language, the old Danish, their rites of heathen worship, and their civil institutions. They established a great national assembly, held annually, where all freeholders had a right to be present. This assembly bore a great resemblance to the Anglo-Saxon Witenagemot, and was called Alþing.* The president of this meeting was elected for life, and was denominated Lögsögumaðr† or Promulgator of the law. Iceland continued this species of government, or republic, for about three centuries, that is, till A.D. 1275, when it became subject to the kings of Norway. Christianity was introduced into Iceland about the end of the 10th century, and was established in 1016.

* This short sketch is much indebted to the important works published by THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF NORTHERN ANTIQUARIES, COPENHAGEN, a Society which claims the especial attention of Englishmen. While too much praise cannot be given to the Professors Finn Magnussen and Rafn, as well as to the late Professor Rask, and the other active members of this institution, for their erudite publications, feelings of the highest respect and the warmest gratitude must ever be excited, when the author recollects the constant literary communications, and the very friendly assistance of Dr. Rafn and Dr. Rask. An account of part of Professor Rafn's valuable works will be found in § 17, 18, and 19.

3. Iceland, in its pagan state, had a literature, a poetry, and mythology, peculiarly its own. The Icelanders preserved their learning and history in oral tradition, by means of their Skalds,‡ who were at once poets and historians. These Skalds were a sort of travelling minstrels, who composed and recited the praises of kings and heroes in verse, and continually migrated from one northern country to another. They were the chroniclers, and often the companions of kings, attended them in their conflicts, and thus, from their presence at the scenes they had to record, they were able to give a lively and faithful description. In the Icelandic language a list is kept of the 230 chief Skalds or poetical historians from Ragnar Lodbrok to Valdemar II. amongst whom are several crowned heads, and celebrated warriors.||

4. A Saga-man § recalled the memory of past events in prose narratives as the Skalds did in verse. The memory of past transactions was thus transmitted from age to age by the poets or Skalds, and the Saga-men or story-tellers, till the introduction of writing, gave them a fixed and durable record.

5. The literature, mythology, and history of the Icelanders, and the old Scandinavians in general, in their pagan and early christian state, are chiefly preserved in the poetic or elder Edda,¶ the prose or younger Edda, and the Sagas, the Njála, the Heimskringla, the Konungskuggsjá, and the Landnámabók. A short account of these works, and their various editions, may be useful.**

** A minute account of the Icelandic works which are published may be found in "Lexicon Islandico Latino-Danicum Björnionis Haldersonii, curd R. K. Raskii, editum Havniæ," 4to. 1814.

6. SÆMUND SIGFUSSEN, a clergyman, born in Iceland in 1056, was the first compiler of the Poetic Edda. He appears to have written some of these poetic effusions from the recital of contemporary Skalds, and to have collected others from manuscripts.

The Icelandic text of the poetic Edda was published in 4to. at Copenhagen in 1787, with a Latin translation, notes, and glossary. A second volume was not printed till 1818, and a third in 1828, by Professor Finn Magnusen. Professor Rask and the Rev. Mr. Afzelius, in 1818, published, at Stockholm, the original of this Edda, carefully accented, and distinguishing i from j, u from v, and ö from o.

7. THE POETIC EDDA contains the Völu-spá,* which gives an account of the creation of the universe, and the gods and men who inhabited it. The Gróu-galdur or Groa's Magic Song. The Sólarljóð or Song of the Sun which is almost entirely Sæmund's own composition, containing ideas of a future life, evidently derived from a christian source. The Vafþrúdnis-mál, which is a sort of poetic dialogue between Odin and a famous giant.

8. THE GRIMNIS-MA'L, or the Song of Grimner, describing the habitations of the deities. The Alvis-mál, Hynđu-ljóð, &c., Hymnisquiða, or the Song of Hymer, &c. Many of these poems can be traced back to the 10th, or even the 9th century.

9. THE PROSE OR YOUNGER EDDA was written by the famous Snorre Sturleson, who was born of a noble family in 1178, at Hvamm on the west coast of Iceland, and was murdered in 1241. The Prose Edda was, therefore, more than a century later than the Poetic.

The first edition of the Prose Edda was published in an abridged form at Copenhagen in 1665, by Resenius, in Icelandic, Danish, and Latin. He appended to this edition the Völu-spá and Háva-mál, two poems from the Poetic Edda. A complete edition of the original text of the Prose Edda was published at Stockholm in 1818, by Professor Rask. The Prose Edda is a course of poetical lectures, drawn up for those young Icelanders who intended to become Skalds or poets. It consists of two parts. The first part, properly called the Edda, explains the mythology of the Poetic Edda, and forms a complete northern Pantheon in the form of fables. The second part is the Skalda or Poetics, which is the art of poetry adopted by the Skalds. It contains a dictionary of poetic synonyms, and the whole art of versification, alliteration, species of verse, &c. In explaining the mythology, and illustrating the different species of versification, Snorre extracted the most interesting parts of the Poetic Edda, and thus contrived in the form of dialogues to give the substance of it in a more intelligible form.

10. NJA'LA, or Life of the celebrated Icclander, Njáll Þorgeirsson, and his sons. It is beautiful in style, and correct in its statements. The Icelandic text was published at Copenhagen, 1772, in 4to. and a Latin version in 1809.

11. Snorre may be justly called the Herodotus of the north, if we only consider his great historical work, Heimskringla,† or Annals of the Norwegian kings from Odin.‡

* Völu-spá the oracle or prophecy of vala, gen. völu.

† Heims-kringla orbis terrarum; heimr mundus, kringla orbis.

‡ In this account of the Edda and other Icelandic works, much use has been made of Wheaton's Hist. of Northmen, where more satisfactory information will be found. In Mallet's Northern Antiquities there is an English translation of the Prose Edda, and many useful notes, with the Icelandic text, and an English translation of five pieces of Runic poetry, amongst which is Ragnar Lodbrok.

It was published by Peringskjöld, with a Latin and Swedish translation, in 2 vols. fol. Stockholm, 1697, and with a Latin and Danish translation by Schöning and Thorlacius, in 3 vols. fol. Copenhagen, 1777—1783, and continued by the younger Thorlacius and Werlauff, in 3 vols. 1813—1826.*

12. KÖNUNGSSKUGGSJA,† or Royal Mirror. This is supposed to be the work of Sverre, king of Norway. It is in the form of dialogue, and gives a view of human life, with practical rules for different stations. It was published in Icelandic, Danish, and Latin, by Halfdan Einarsen, in 4to. 1768, Sorö.

13. THE LANDNÁMABÓK is an account of the most remarkable events connected with the first settlement of Iceland, its revolutions, and the introduction of Christianity. This history commences in the 9th, and extends to the 12th century. It was begun by Are Frodi, and continued by other hands. Are Frodi was born in Iceland in 1067; he was the friend and fellow-student of Sæmund. His work is remarkable as being the earliest historical composition written in the Old Danish or northern tongue, which still remains the living language of Iceland. Only a few fragments of his works are remaining, which have been published under the title of Schedæ‡ and Landnámabók.§

14. THE SAGAS are very numerous. These were popular narratives, recording the lives of kings, chieftains, and noble families. To aid the memory of the Saga-man or Story-teller, he contrived to introduce the most striking metrical passages from the poems of the Skalds.

15. Under the well-directed patronage of The Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries at Copenhagen, the following works have appeared.||

FORNMANNA Sögur, vol. i.—xi.; Oldnordiske Sagaer, vol. i.—xi.; Scripta Historica Islandorum, vol. i.—vii. containing—of the historical Sagas, recording events out of Iceland—the history of the Norwegian kings from Olaf Tryggvason to Magnus Lagabætir, and of the Danish kings (Knyttlinga) from Harald Blue-tooth to Canute VI., or the period between the middle of the 10th century, and the year 1274; in Icelandic, Danish, and Latin.

16. ÍSLENDINGA SÖGUR, vol. i. ii. containing—of the historical Sagas, recording events in Iceland itself—Are Frodi's Schedæ, Landnámabók,¶ and Heiðarviga-, Ljós-vetninga-, Svarfdæla-, Vallhaljóts-, Vemundar ok Víga-Skútu, and Víga-Glúms Sagas, in Icelandic.

the north, assignable to the period anterior to the colonization of Iceland, or the era of authentic history; in Icelandic and Danish.

19. KRA'KUMÁL, sive Epicedium Ragnaris Lodbroci,* or Ode on the heroic deeds and death of the Danish king, Ragnar Lodbrok, in England; in Icelandic, Danish, Latin, and French. This Krákumál is by some called Loðbrókarkviðu, or the Death-song of Ragnar Lodbrok; who is said to have reigned in Denmark and Sweden in the latter part of the 8th century.† Ragnar invaded Northumbria, and was opposed by Ella, king of Deira. This fact ascertains the date of the event, as Ella usurped the Northumbrian crown in 862, and perished in 867. Ragnar was taken prisoner, and Ella ordered him to be cast into a dungeon, where he might perish by venomous snakes.‡ This song is sometimes quoted as the composition of Ragnar.§ It is probable that the first twenty-three verses constituted the war-song of Ragnar and his followers. The remaining six strophes may have been composed after the king's death by his queen Aslaga, or Kráka, or by some of the contemporary or later skalds.¶ This song celebrates the fifty-one depredations of Ragnar in various countries. The death of Ragnar is not only important in an historical point of view, causing his sons Halfden, Ingwar, and Ubbo to undertake an invasion which destroyed the Octarchy of England, and, for a time, dethroned Alfred; but if the song were composed by him or in his time, it will serve as a very early specimen of the Scandinavian language.¶

20. From the Old Danish (Danska túnga) or Scandinavian (Norræna), spring those languages and dialects which are spoken from the coasts of Greenland to those of Finland, from the Frozen Ocean to the Eider.** This Old Danish was, in its purest state, carried into Iceland by the first Norwegian refugees in the 9th century. Hence the Icelandic is the same language as the Old Danish, and the Icelanders, from their insular and high northern locality, have retained the Old Danish in such purity and with such slight variations, that it may still be considered the living language of Iceland. There is so little difference between the present writing and the most ancient records, that modern Icelandic scholars can read the oldest documents with the greatest facility.

* It was first printed in 4to. at Copenhagen, 1686, in the work of Olaus Wormius, in his Ramus Danica literatura antiquissima, vulgo Gothica dicta. It was afterwards printed six times more by different persons in various forms before it appeared in the original, with an English translation, entitled "Five pieces of Runic Poetry translated from the Icelandic language," London, 8vo. 1763. These pieces were translated by Dr. Thomas Percy, bishop of Dromore, and inserted at the end of the 2nd vol. of his translation of Mallet's Northern Antiquities. The fifteenth time of its appearance was in 12mo. with the title of Lodbrokar-Quida; or, the Death-song of Lodbroc, with a free English translation, an Islando-Latino glossary, and explanatory notes, by James Johnston, printed [at Copenhagen by Aug. Ferd. Steen] 1782. The twenty-seventh form in which this celebrated song has appeared is the most splendid and complete. This is by far the best edition; followed by a Latin and French translation, and a complete critical apparatus, with a minute account of every edition, and a facsimile of the first page of a manuscript found in the Royal Museum, Copenhagen, 1821. The title of this work is "Krákumál, sive Epicedium Ragnaris Lodbroci Regis Danie."—Vide Fornaldar Sögur Norðrlandi, i. p. 305; Nordiske Fortids Sagaer, i. p. 282.

* The Danish king Valdemar the First, sent, probably at the suggestion of the historian Saxo Grammaticus, some individuals skilled in Runes to Bleking, between the years 1167 and 1182, with the view of having this inscription deciphered. His emissaries, however, failed to accomplish the object of their mission. Subsequently, and especially during the last century or two, the attempt from time to time was renewed under the auspices of some of the most learned men of the day, but their endeavours led to no more satisfactory results. It was reserved for the great Archaeologist and Runologist Finn Magnussen, after a personal inspection of the inscription on the spot, to interpret it in its entire state in May 1834, and to determine the form of verse (the ancient Fornyrðislag) in which it was written. Professor Magnussen's remarks upon this subject are inserted in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries, Nordisk Tidsskrift for Oldkyndighed, vol. ii. p. 276—304; and in Historisch-Antiquarische Mittheilungen, herausgegeben von der Königlichen Gesellschaft für Nordische Alterthumskunde, Kopenhagen, 1835, pp. 109—117. In p. 111 of the latter work, it is recorded that Professor Finn Magnussen for more than ten months tried in vain to decipher the inscription. On the 22nd of May, 1834, by attempting to read from right to left, he immediately succeeded in deciphering the first three words, and in less than two hours he explained the whole inscription.

34. A few examples of Danish are given from the Scriptures, to facilitate the comparison, and thus shew the connexion of this tongue with those of Teutonic origin. The first example is from the Danish Epistles and Gospels, Leipsic, 1518, fol.

Mk. iv. 3, 6.—En mand gick wd ath saa sin Sæd. Som hæ saade da falt somt aff

39. As a specimen of the present Danish, a better cannot be selected than the following National Song, which is to the Danes what "God save the King" is to the English. It was written by Johannes Evald, a poet who flourished in the latter part of the last century. (Born 1743, died 1781).*

Kong Christian stod ved høien Mast
I Røg og Damp.

Hans Værg hamrede saa fast,
At Gothens Hielm og Hierne brast.
Da sank hver fiendtligt Speil og Mast
I Røg og Damp.

Flye, skreg de, flye, hvad flygte kan!
Hvo staaer for Danmarks Christian
I Kamp?

Niels Juel gav Agt paa Stormens Brag:
Nu er det Tid!

Han heisede det røde Flag,
Og slog paa Fienden Slag i Slag.
Da skreg de høit blant Stormens Brag:

Nu er det Tid!
Flye, skreg de, hver, som veed et Skiul!
Hvo kan bestaae for Danmarks Juel
I strid?

O Nordhav, Glimt, af Vessel brød
Din mørke Skye:

Da tyede Kæmper til dit Skiød;
Thi med ham lynte Skræk og Død;
Fra Vallen hortest Vraal, som brød
Din Skye:

Fra Danmark lyner Tordenskiold;
Hver give sig i Himlens Vold,
Og flye!

King Christian stood by the lofty mast
In mist and smoke.

His sword was hammering so fast,
Through Gothic helm and brain it passed.
Then sank each hostile hulk and mast
In mist and smoke.

Fly, shouted they, fly, he who can!
Who braves of Denmark's Christian
The stroke?

Now is the hour!

He hoisted his blood-red flag once more,
And smote the foe of the Dane full sore.†
And shouted loud through the tempest's roar:

Now is the hour!
Fly, shouted they, for shelter fly!
Of Denmark's Juel who can defy
The power?

North Sea! a glimpse of Wessel rent
Thy murky sky!

Then champions to thine arms were sent;
Terror and death glared where he went;
From the waves was heard a wail, that rent
Thy murky sky!

From Denmark thunders Tordenskiold;
Let each to heaven commend his soul,
And fly!

* For this piece and the translation, I am indebted to my friend, H. W. Longfellow, Esq. M.A. Professor of Belles Lettres in Harvard University, Cambridge, America, Nov. 1835.

† "And smote upon the foe full sore."

Sortladne Hav !
Modtag din Ven, som uforsagt
Tör möde Faren med Foragt,
Saa stolt, som du, mod Stormens Magt,

Sortladne Hav !
Og rask igiennem Larm og Spil,
Og Kamp og Seier föer mig til Min Grav !

Path of the Dane to fame and might,
Dark-rolling wave !
Receive thy friend, who scorning flight
Goes to meet danger with despite,
Proudly as thou meetest the tempest's might,

Dark-rolling wave !
And amid pleasures and alarms
And war and victory, be thine arms
My grave !

48. One of the most eminent of modern Swedish poets is Bishop Tegnér. He took the story of Frithiof from one of the old Sagas, and under the title of Frithiof's Saga, he has written in flowing verse a most interesting story of royal affection. The following extract is from the Exile of Frithiof, in the original Swedish, in the Norwegian or Danish translation, and with a poetical version of the Rev. W. Strong.

*Dialect of Dalecarlia.**

50. The principal dialect † of Sweden is the Dalecarlian. The Dalcarls are spoken of as the Swedish Highlanders. Inhabiting that secluded region which stretches westward from the Silian Lake to the Alps of Norway, they have preserved comparatively unchanged the manners, customs, and language of their Gothic forefathers.

"Here," says Serenius, ‡ "are the only remains in Sweden of the ancient Gothic stock, whereof the aspiration of the letters l and w bears witness upon their tongues, an infallible characteristic of the Moeso-Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, and Icelandic." In another place, speaking of the guttural or aspirated l, he says: "Germans and Danes cannot pronounce it, no more than the aspirated w; for which reason this was a fatal letter three hundred years ago in these nations, when Engelbrecht, a born Dalcarl, set it up for a shibboleth, and whoever could not say Hivid hest i Korngulff, was taken for a foreigner, because he could not aspirate the w, nor utter the guttural l."§ It is even asserted, that with their ancient customs and language the Dalcarls have preserved the use of the old Runic alphabet, although from feelings of religious superstition it was prohibited by Olaf Shätkonung at the beginning of the 11th century, and discontinued in all other parts of Sweden. This is mentioned on the authority of Näsman, who wrote in the first half of the last century.]

51. The Dalecarlian dialect is spoken in its greatest purity in Elfdalen, Mora, and Orsa, parishes of East Dalecarlia.

In West Dalecarlia it is mingled with the dialects of the Norwegian mountains, and bears the name of Mahlungs Skinnarmål. The peculiarities of this jargon are these:—1. Prefixing the letter v to all monosyllables which begin with a vowel, as vom for om if; vord for ord a word, &c. 2. The transposition of syllables, as jasel for selja to sell; lata for tala to speak, &c. Thus they say—

Kan du låta tæ korba, so kimi du låvi?

Kan du tala tæ baka, so miki du vilå?

Canst thou speak backwards, as much as thou wilt?

52. The inhabitants of the town of Särna, on the borders of the Norwegian Alps in East Dalecarlia, speak a mixed dialect of Dalecarlian and Norwegian; and it is said, that they understood the language spoken by certain Dutchmen, who were in the habit of visiting those mountains for the purpose of taking falcons, then used in hunting.* We are also told of a Dalecarlian boy who was taken by a Swedish ambassador to England and who easily understood the language of the peasants of the northern counties.†

53. The three branches of the Dalecarlian dialect, as spoken in Elfdalen, Mora, and Orsa, differ from each other not only in the change of letters and the inflexion of words, but also in accent and pronunciation. Between those of Elfdalen and Mora the difference is not, however, very great. That of Orsa stands more apart, as may be seen by the following versions of the Lord's Prayer.

54. Dialect of Elfdalen.

This common dialect has perhaps been as much settled and polished by Norwegians as by natives of Denmark.* As there is this identity in the Danish and Norwegian, the copious examples of the Danska tunga previously given, will serve also for the Norwegian, and will render further remarks unnecessary.

Ferroe Dialect.

58. A specimen of early Ferroe taken from Professor Rafn's Færeyinga Saga, Pref. p. iv. Thrand was one of the first inhabitants of Ferroe. Many religious verses are ascribed to him, and are still preserved by oral tradition among the inhabitants of the Ferroes. The following Creed, written down by a native Ferroe clergyman, Pastor Schröter, now Emeritus, who translated the Gospel of St. Matthew,† will serve as an example of this dialect.

XII.—THE AFFINITY OF THE GERMANIC LANGUAGES.

1. THE Germanic languages, comprehending not only the Low and High-German, but also the Scandinavian, have a striking similarity, and are evidently of cognate origin. The short history of each language, accompanied with extracts, and a detail of their most evident peculiarities, have occupied so much space, and engaged the attention so long, that it may be desirable to advert again to their similarity. They appear as dialects of one extensive language, branches of one vigorous stock, or streams from the same copious fountain. A recollection of this will, in some degree, restore to order the confusion of Babel, and therefore very much facilitate the acquisition of languages.* An appeal to the Germanic languages will be a sufficient proof, not only of their similarity, but of their identity. This likeness and close relationship will be clearly manifest by a few examples from their vocabularies and grammatical inflections.

2. In the following examples, the v in the Dutch visch has exactly the same sound as the English f; hence fish has the same name in all the Germanic languages.

Eng.	A.-S.	Dut.	Frs.	Ger.	Moes.	Dan.	Swed.	Icel.
a fish	fisc	visch	fisk	fisch	fisk-s	fisk	fisk	fisk-r
a fish's	fisc-es	visch-est	fisk-es	fisch-es	fisk-is	fisk-s	fisk-s	fisk-s
to a fish	fisc-e	visch-e	fisk-e	fisch-e	fisk-a	fisk	fisk	fisk-i
a fish	fisc	visch	fisk	fisch	fisk	fisk	fisk	fisk
fishes	fisc-as	visch-en	fisk-ar	fisch-e	fisk-os	fisk-e	fisk-ar	fisk-ar fishes'	fisc-a	visch-en	fisk-a	fisch-e	fisk-e	fisk-es	fisk-ara	fisk-a
to fishes	fisc-um	visch-en	fisk-um	fisch-en	fisk-en	fisk-e	fisk-ar	fisk-um
fishes	fisc-as	visch-en	fisk-ar	fisch-e	fisk-ans	fisk-e	fisk-ar	fisk-a

3. The identity of the Germanic languages will be still more evident if a few examples be taken from what has been generally called the irregular parts of these languages. It may be useful to remark, that the Moes. A.-S. and Eng. p or th, in Dut. Dan. and Swed. is changed into d. The Dan. jeg and mig are pronounced yih and mih: the Swed. jag and mig are sounded yih and mih.

* Classification and association are of the utmost importance in learning languages. The greater part of European tongues in the south and west are those of Germanic, and those of Roman origin. The Germanic class embraces the modern English, German, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Icelandic, &c.; the Roman or Latin comprises the Spanish, Italian, Portuguese, French, &c. To this subject has been drawn the attention of an old friend, the Rev. W. Pulling, M.A., A.S.L. Rector of Dymchurch, Kent. He was induced to deliver in the University of Cambridge "A course of Lectures on the French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, and their chief dialects, Cambridge, 1834." These interesting and valuable Lectures deserve attention, and it is greatly to be wished that Mr. Pulling may receive sufficient encouragement to carry into effect his intention of publishing a volume containing short grammars of the languages of Roman origin, to be followed by another volume comprising grammars of the Germanic tongues.

† The Dutch, &c. now generally use prepositions instead of the old terminations: thus, Dut. van een visch of a fish, instead of visches.

Eng. I am, be: A.-S. ic eom, beo: Frs. ik ben: Plat. ick bin, em: Dut. ik bin, em: Moes. ik im: Ger. ich bin: Icel. ek er, em: Dan. jeg er: Swed. jag är.—Eng. I was: A.-S. ic was: Frs. ik was: Plat. ick was: Dut. ik was: Moes. ik was: Ger. ich war: Icel. er var: Dan. jeg var: Swed. jag vas.—Eng. come, p. came, pp. come: A.-S. cume, p. com, pp. cumen: Frs. kem, p. kom, pp. kemen: Plat. kom, p. kwam, pp. gekomen. Dut. kome, p. kwam, pp. gekomen: Moes. quima, p. quam, pp. quuman(s): Ger. komme, p. kam, pp. (ge)kommen: Icel. kem, p. kom, pp. kominn: Dan. kommer, p. kam, pp. kummen: Swed. kommer, p. kom, pp. kommen.—Eng. thou: A.-S. þu: Frs. thu: Plat. thû: Flem. du: Moes. thu: Ger. du: Icel. þu: Dan. du: Swed. du.—Eng. who: A.-S. hwa: Frs. hwa: Plat. huie: Dut. wie: Moes. hwa(s): Ger. wer: Icel. hwa(r): Dan. hwô: Swed. hô.—Eng. good, better, best. A.-S. gôd (bet), betra, betst: Frs. gôd, better, (betere), beste: Dut. goed, beter, best: Moes. goths (god(s) or bats), batiza, batist(s): Ger. gut, besser, beste: Icel. gôd(r) bettri, bestr: Dan. god, bedre, beste: Swed. god, bättre, bäst.

4. If these examples do not convince the reader that these languages are mere dialectic variations of one ancient tongue, perhaps the following declension of the pronoun of the first person may produce full conviction.

Eng.	A.-S.	Dut.	Frs.	Ger.	Moes.	Dan.	Swed.	Icel.
mine	min	mins	min	mein	meina	min	min	min
to me	me	mij	mi	mir	mis	mig	mig	mér
me	me	mij	mi	mich	mik	mig	mig	mik
we	we	wij	wi	wir	weis	wi	wi	wér
our	ûre	onzer	use	unser	unsara	vor	wâr	wâr
to us	us	ons	us	uns	uns	os	oss	oss
us	us	ons	us	uns	uns	os	oss	oss.

5. In the most irregular parts of the Germanic languages, even at the present day, there is a complete correspondence, which shows that there must have been a time when the nations of Germanic origin were all united in one tribe. Some branches of this great Gothic family have not had any close intercourse or alliance for many centuries; the present similarity of their languages must then have arisen from a close anterior connexion. The period of this connexion it is not easy to specify; but it must have been very early and intimate, as the similarity is most evident in the words which designate what was most necessary, in the rudest state of society, and in those verbs generally called irregular,* and which are even now most in use. This early connexion it is very important to observe, and it is the part of scientific etymology to show it in the clearest light.

XIII.—THE IMPORTANCE OF ETYMOLOGY,* THE MANNER OF FORMING WORDS, AND AN OUTLINE OF THE GERMAN SYSTEM.

1. WORDS are the creation of mind. As the true philosopher looks with humble adoration, from the variety and perfection of God's visible creation to the power and goodness of the Creator, so the philosophic etymologist is constantly led, from the various forms and applications of words, to contemplate the intellectual powers in which man most resembles his Creator. The true and judicious etymologist is anxious to obtain the right meaning and application of words, and thus a good etymologist is most likely to become the best metaphysician. He is not satisfied with the common and external signification of words received from popular use, but he examines their structure, their radical, that is, their real and internal meaning, and thus endeavours to discover the reason of the application of the term. When the understanding is thus called into exercise in the formation of words, precision is not only given to expression, but the higher faculty of reason lends its powerful aid to the memory, and greatly facilitates the acquisition of a language. The etymology of a word being understood, and thus the sanction of reason obtained, neither that word nor any of its family can scarcely ever escape from the memory. The use of etymology will, however, be best proved by a few plain examples, showing the real meaning of some common words.

Acorn, A.-S. æceren, æcern, from æc, æc an oak; cern or corn corn, the corn or fruit of the oak.—Childhood, A.-S. cildhād, from cild a child, hād a condition, state, a child's condition.—Kingdom, A.-S. cyngdóm, cyningdóm, from cyning, cyng a king; dóm power, jurisdiction, a king's jurisdiction, or dominion.—Island, A.-S. ealand, from ea water, land land; water-land, land surrounded with water.—Sheriff, or shirereeve, A.-S. scir-gerefa, from scir a share, division, shire, county; gerefa a reeve, governor, a governor of a shire.—Neighbour, A.-S. neah-bur, from neah near; bur a bower, dwelling, one who has a dwelling near.—Righteous, A.-S. rihtwis, from riht right, just; wis wise, right wise, honest, virtuous.—Fosterchild, A.-S. foster-cild, from foster food, nourishment; cild a child, a child that receives food from a person who is not its parent, &c.

2. In looking at the first formation of words in the origin of language, it may be observed, that a knowledge of things appears to be conveyed to the mind through the medium of the five senses, especially by the sight. An idea or image of a visible object is formed in the mind by means of the eye; and the word which, when written or spoken, conveys this image to the mind, is called a noun. If it be most probable that the general appearance of a material thing would be impressed on the mind before any particular part or action of the thing, then nouns* must be the primitive words in language. Every noun or thing which has an existence, must have either an action or state of being, and the word which expresses that action or state of being is denominated a verb. If, after the general outline of an object was formed in the mind, the attention were fixed upon its action or state of being, then verbs were formed subsequently to nouns. Thus all things material were first designated by the noun, while the subsequent motions of these objects were indicated by the verb in its simplest form.†

* Etymology is thus defined:—Optime Cicero ἐτυμολογίαν. Latine vertit veriloquium. Eumque merito defendit Martinus: certe verbotum non potuit melius Cicero. Nam certum est, quod ἐτυμον sit verum: et ἐτυμολογος, qui το ἐτυμον λέγει. Scaliger tamen Etymologiam sic definit, tanquam esset a λογος ratio. Etymologia, inquit, est vocis ratio, id est vis, qua vox a voce generatur.—Wächter's Glos. Germ. Prolegom. l'II.

3. This reasoning is corroborated by the structure not only of the Germanic languages but of the Shemitic.

A few examples may be first cited from the Hebrew, where the roots of words have been generally said to exist only in the verb, from which nouns were always said to be formed. The following verbs, however, evidently spring from nouns. From נָח ath a stooping, נָחַת nêthe to incline, bow down;—אָל al power, strength, אָלַח ale to exercise power in injuring, to curse;—אָן an labour, אָנַח anên to be faint with labour, to complain;—אָפ ap heat, anger, אָפַח ape to operate as heat, to bake;—אָר ar a river, what flows, אָרַח are to be flowing off, to crop, אָרַר arêr to flow or take from, to curse;—אָש as fire, אָשַׁח asêš to be fired, angry, or grieved;—אָת at a sign, thou, the substance of a thing, אָתַח ate to come, come hear, to approach;—בָּד bêd what is separate, a branch, desert, בָּדַד bêdêd to be alone;—בֵּן bên a son, בָּנָה bêne to build, to build up, to continue, as a son builds up or continues the family or line of his father;—יָד id a hand, יָדַד ide to put forth, to extend;—עָץ oj a tree, עָצָה oje to be as a tree, to make firm or steady.

4. In Greek some verbs appear also to be formed from nouns.

Σαλει agitation of the sea, the sea, σαλευω I sea, I act as the sea, I shake, or agitate:—αγγελος a messenger, angel, αγγελω I act as a messenger, I bring information, * Kimkhi expressly declares יָצָא מִשָּׁם the verb proceeds from the noun. See Professor Lee's Heb. Gram. 8vo. London, 2nd edit. 1832, Lect. VI. Art. 144, 146; and Lect. X. Art. 182, § 2, note, for some interesting facts on this subject. "In Burman, verbs are nothing more than nouns conjugated with the pronouns."—Id. Lect. VI. Art. 144, § 1, note (*). See also my Compendious Gram. of the Anglo-Saxon Language, 8vo. London, 1826, ch. VII. p. 57.

Locke says, "I doubt not, if we could trace words to their sources, we should find, in all languages, the names that stand for things that fall not under our senses, to have had their first rise from sensible objects.—On Human Understanding, bk. 3, ch. I.

Notiones verborum propriæ omnes sunt corporeæ, sive ad res pertinentes, quæ sensus nostris ferunt.—Van Lennep, p. 7. Nec alias esse (verborum significationes) nisi corporeas, sive eas, quibus res, sensibus, exterius expositæ, designantur.—Id. Anal. p. 41. Mr. Richardson in Gents. Mag. April, 1836, p. 373.

The Germanic literati differ in opinion on this subject. Many eminent etymologists declare that the roots of all words were originally verbs. Professor J. Grimm, though of the same opinion, uses a more cautious expression, and says verbs appear to be the foundation of all words (Deutsche Gram. II. 5.) It is true that many words originate from verbs; but it is erroneous to attempt to trace all words to verbs as their root. Professor Grimm, on the supposition that all roots were verbs, has quoted a great number of verbs as lost which probably never existed: this great investigator, adds Schmitthenner, is certainly led astray by a false supposition. (Schmitthenner's Etymol. Darmstadt, 8vo. 1833, p. 20—23.) In § 17 he says, "the root is neither a noun nor a verb, but what precedes both," &c.

† Sir Graves C. Haughton's "Inquiry into the nature of Language," prefixed to his elaborate and very learned Dictionary of Bengali and Sanskrit, 4to. London, 1833, p. 4.

I tell:—αγων, -ωνος a combat, battle, αγωνια a conflict of mind, distress, agony, αγωνιαω I am in agony, am distressed:—αθλος, ἄθλος a combat, αθλευω, αθλειω I fight, combat:—διμα, -ᾶτος the effusion of blood, διματ, -ᾶδος blood streaming from a wound, διμασσω I stain with blood:—αἰχμη a spear, αἰχμαζω I fight with a spear, brandish:—ακρα the point, top, maturity, ακραζω I grow up to maturity, ripen, &c.

5. The root or origin of a verb in Welsh is, as the learned Dr. Davies remarked, for the most part, a noun, as dysc doctrina; dyscais docui; câr amicus, carav amo, vel amabo. This substantive, adds the same writer, is generally identical with the third person singular of the future indicative, (as in Hebrew the third of the preterite is the root,) or with the second of the imperative, which forms are generally the same.*

6. The Germanic languages afford many examples of verbs evidently derived from nouns.

From A.-S. dæl: Plat. Dut. deel: Frs. del: Moes. dails: Ger. theil: Old Ger. dell: Icel. deil: Dan. deel: Swed. del a part, pars; we have the following verbs in A.-S. dæl-an: Plat. del-en: Dut. deel-en: Frs. del-a: Moes. dail-jan: Old Ger. deil-an: Icel. deil-a: Dan. deel-e: and Swed. del-a to give a part, to separate, divide.—From A.-S. meolc, milc: Plat. Dut. melk: Ger. milch: Old Ger. miluh, milich: Icel. miðlk: Dan. malk: and Swed. mjölk MILK, lac, we have the following verbs in A.-S. meolc-ean: Plat. Dut. melk-en: Ger. melk-en: Old Ger. melk-an: Icel. miolk-a: Dan. malk-e: and Swed. mjolk-a to afford or give milk, to milk, to draw milk; mulgere.—From A.-S. rec: Plat. Dut. rook: Frs. rec, rek: Ger. rauch: Icel. reykr: Dan. røg: and Swed. rök smoke, exhalatio; we have the following verbs in A.-S. rec-an: Plat. Dut. rook-en: Frs. rek-a to smoke, dwell in, inhabit: Ger. rauch-en: Icel. reyk-ia: Dan. røg-e: and Swed. rok-a to give a smoke, to smoke, to BEEK; fumare, exhalare.

7. Both nouns and verbs are formed into adjectives.

Some nouns are used as adjectives without any alteration; but adjectives in A.-S. are generally formed by annexing to the noun or verb, -en, -ig, -isc, from an, unnan, ican or ecan to give, add, eke; also, -bær bearing, producing;—cund born, a kind, sort; -ece eternal; -ende; -fæst fast, firm; -full full, plenty; -lic like; -sum some, part, &c.—As læð n. evil, mischief; læð adj. evil, pernicious; gold gold, -en add, add or join something, as golden bræd golden thread; blod blood, blodig bloody; wit mind, wit, witty; folc folk, folcisc like the people, plebeian; æppelbær apple-bearing; leohtbær light-bearing; eorðcund earthly; godcund divine; efenece coeternal; cennan to bear, cennende bearing; drincan to drink, drincende drinking; faran, feran to go, ferende going; æ law, æfæst fast in the law, firm, religious; tungful full of tongue, talkative; eorð earth, eorðlic earthlike, earthly; lufu love, luflic love-like, lovely; lang long, langsum longsome, lasting; wyn pleasure, wynsum some pleasure, pleasant.

8. Adverbs are often formed by frequently using nouns in certain cases.

Thus hwilum awhile, now, d. of hwil time, space; þonces of gratitude, þonce with gratitude, gratefully, thankfully, g. and d. of þanc favour, &c.

9. The remarks in paragraphs 3 and 4 can only refer to words in their first formation. In a subsequent stage of language, many nouns have evidently had their origin from verbs, adjectives, &c.

Thus hunta a hunting, chase, from huntian to hunt; fiscoð a fishing, from fiscian to fish; gelicnes likeness, from gelic like; hrædnes readiness, from hræd ready; hrædlicnes readiness, from hrædlic ready, quick; blawung a blowing, from blawan to blow; hal healthy, sound; halig holy, haligan to consecrate; haligdom a sanctuary; halignes holiness; halgung, gehalgung a hallowing, consecration, &c.

10. All that is here stated, as well as what is advanced in the preceding paragraphs, is the mere threshold of etymology, that which is the most evident and palpable; but perhaps it may have appeared that even this incipient knowledge is not destitute of utility. Should there be a desire to enter into the arcana of etymology, or to fathom its deep abyss, much time and attention must be devoted to the works of German philologists,* as the etymology of the Teutonic languages has been carried to great extent by some of the most able men in Germany. They have adopted the principle, and introduced much of the refinement discovered and applied by Sanscrit grammarians. Every one who investigates the subject must acknowledge there is much metaphysical nicety in their mode of treating it, and much laborious exertion to make it intelligible. Though such talents and industry certainly deserve attention, yet the great question is, whether in the western tongues these metaphysical subtleties can be made available to practical utility. The learned and indefatigable Dr. Becker, in his German Grammar for Englishmen, with many of his countrymen, asserts that their system is found most efficient in practice. It is, therefore, only common justice to let these erudite Germans speak for themselves, or rather to allow one to explain for the whole. A recent writer, and one of the least diffuse and most able after Professor Bopp† and Grimm, is Professor Schmitthenner, from whose Introduction to the Short German Dictionary‡ the following abstract of the German language is taken. The substance is only given, but where it is translated the version is as close as possible.

11. OF VOWELS. The modern German has five simple vowels, a, e, i, o, u.

Three of these are radical vowels, a, i, u. The two others, e and o, are only shades of a, i, u. The y of the A.-S. and the old northern dialects has something analogous in a soft u, but it is unknown to the other German dialects. It is borrowed from the Frankfurt am Main, 1824, and all the other valuable publications of Der frankfurtischen Gelehrtenvereinigung für deutsche Sprache, Herman, Frankfurt, &c.

† Though Professor Bopp, whose general erudition, and critical knowledge of Sanscrit in particular, are universally admitted, was so obliging as to send the author a copy of his Vocalismus immediately on publication; it is impossible to give a clear abstract of so learned and profound a work in the short space which can be here devoted to the subject. Those, therefore, who read German, must peruse and reperuse Vocalismus, oder Sprachvergleichende Kritiken über J. Grimm's deutsche Grammatik, und Graff's althochdeutschen Sprachschatz, mit Begründung einer neuen Theorie des ablauts von Franz Bopp, 8vo. Berlin, 1836. An English translation of this work would be a most acceptable boon to the public. Professor Bopp goes at once to the oriental source, and with a new theory of the ablaut, opposed to Dr. Grimm, (see § 11) he shows how much the vocalism of the Germanic languages may be philosophically explained by the system of Indian grammarians, and proves that the ablaut, or change of the radical vowel, is influenced by the vowel of the termination.

Greek; but in earlier times it was also used in some original German words to express i. It must be ascribed to the form of the epiglottis, that there can only be three original vowels, though in a variety of shades and colouring. This is a natural fact in language and grammar. All other vowels are only considered as shades and approximations. Of these three,* the vowel a is the easiest, most simple, and universal sound.—The radical vowels undergo various changes in the declension and formation of words.—1. By a shade changing the i into e, and the u into o; as Moes. niman, Ger. nehmen to take: Moes. giban, Ger. geben to give: Moes. uftô, Ger. oft often: Moes. fugls, Ger. vogel a bird.—2. By upsound (auflaut) or thinning of the vowel or sound, by earlier etymologists called (umlaut). If, for instance, in the inflection or formation of a radical syllable which has a, o, or u, and consequently a strong full vowel, an i is added, but which in the new German is changed into e, or entirely omitted; then these three vowels change into a higher but weaker sound, the a into ä or e, the o into ö, and the u into ü; as adel, edel: Old Ger. adal, edili: ast a branch, æste branches: Gott God, götter gods: Old Ger. kot, kotier: blut, blütig, and blutig: Old Ger. pluot, pluotic, or pluotac.—3. By change of vowels (umlaut), or change of one vowel into another, by some etymologists improperly called offsound (ablaut). In the formation of a word it thus happens that some roots of a go over into i and u, as binde, band, gebunden, properly band, binde, gebunden.—4. By insound (inlaut), in the Sanscrit called Guna, that is, in the formation of a word another vowel is placed before the radical vowel, like an internal augment, to denote the change which an idea undergoes. From the nature of the vowels the following law is deduced,—that the insound or guna can only proceed in the following order, a, i, u. A can be placed before a (a + a), before i (a + i), and u (a + u); i only before i (i + i), and before u (i + u), and u only before u (u + u).—According to the radical vowels, or what we call organic sounds, there can, in reality, only exist the following six diphthongs, aa, ai, au, ii, iu, uu.—In the reverse series, the vowels may be also compounded, but they form, as the pronunciation directly shows, no simple diphthongs. The diphthongs in the new High-German are formed partly by shades which the radical vowels or sounds suffer, and partly according to the peculiarity of the dialect which is become the written language, as û, (ô), ai, au, (ô), ei, eu, and ie.—In pronunciation and writing, the û as a diphthong is put aside; but it ought to have the power of a + a in the explanation of words. The three simple vowels a, i, u, with the guna † aa, ai, au, ii, iu, uu, are partly the natural and partly the historical normal sounds, and the original type of vocalism.

12. In the different dialects, the vowels, by upsound, shading, disorganization, &c. are softened and tinged different ways, but all in a certain order and according to determined rules. Thus, as the comparative zoologist is able to recognise the type of the genus in all deviations of the form of the single animal, so the comparative etymologist must be able to reduce the vocalism of the dialect to its original type, and thus comprehend it, for otherwise his perception is dark, and his whole proceeding uncertain, and vain error. Some complain that the doctrine of the guna is difficult, but nothing is more simple. In the diphthong we have only to consider the first letter as a prefix, denoting the formation, an inserted vowel equal to the insound root kan; Old Ger. chan; from fallen to fall, the root fal, Old Ger. val; from bücken to bow, the root bug—by guna biegen to bend (Old Ger. puk—piokan); from ricke a doe, reh (instead of rih), &c. In the old as well as in the modern Ger. language, a double consonant is used in writing only to express the sharpening of the consonant.

16. OF THE ROOT. The root is the simple syllable which designates the first appearance of a thing. According to its signification it has a simple vowel a, i, u, and a single consonant. It is often very easy to discover the root, for we need only take from the word the vowel forming the umlaut, and the guna (inlaut); the gemination, and the terminating syllables.

For example, let us take from the verb leuchten to light, the guna e, and the post-fixed syllable ten; then will remain luch, Old Ger. luh, Lat. luc-ere.—From fuhr (Old Ger. vuor) take the guna, then remains fahr (Old Ger. var), &c. In general, a comparison with the old form is quite necessary.

17. According to its signification the root is neither a noun nor a verb, but it is what precedes both. It is the expression of the simplest intuition by a sound, without determining any associate idea of the gender, the time, &c.

Let us take the appearance of blau,—then the root is blu, f. Lat. fulvus (which, however, signifies something else,) and by guna blau the expression of the sound instead of it without any further determination, whether it be a thing, a quality, or only a relation. But being in reality a quality, it is afterwards used as an adjective, and the principal word or noun bläue blueness, and the verb bläuen to blue or to make blue, are only derived from it by additional letters. In the same manner let us take the impression which the cry of chickens or crows produces on the ear; the simplest expression of the sound will be kra, Old Ger. chra. As this impression quickly vanishes, there is directly formed the verb krähen to crow, Old Ger. chrâhan; present tense ich krähe I crow, Old Ger. chrâ-hu, and krähte, Old Ger. chrâ-ta I crew, and also in the same manner the noun das krähen the crowing, Old Ger. chrâ-t; die krähe the crow, Old Ger. chrâ-ja, &c. In this manner language springs up everywhere full of fine signification and inexhaustible life.

Of the formation of words by umlaut and inlaut, or by change of vowels and by guna.

18. This takes place when, for the designation of the gender, case, or time, vowels or sounds are added. The transition of the root into different words is in all cases easily understood. Let us take the root luh, New Ger. hell clear, light, then by guna (inlaut) and an added t, is formed licht, New Ger. licht (instead of liecht) the clearness, light; and also the adj. licht light, &c.

The determination of the signification of words and roots.

19. Language generally originates from the most simple perception of our senses. The appearances which offer themselves to the sight, not yet dimmed by any reflection, are the qualities and the relation of things in time and space, such as, light, dark:—black, white:—great, small:—standing, running—to rise, to fall, &c.

20. These appearances are immediately determined or marked by the language, whether they are resting qualities, as; blue, yellow, great, small, &c., or a temporal relation, as, flows, stands, burns, smokes, &c., or only relations of space and number, as; by, at, for—one, two, &c. Things, of which the appearance only shows the special situation, the number and their relation, can only be designated by language in such a manner that it either points to their situation in space, by which pronouns originate, as, I, he, his, that, &c., or it describes them by nominating their qualities and their temporal relation, as, the bird, the floating in air. Thus originate the names of things, and each name is originally a short description.

21. It is the task of etymology to pursue the signification now in use, through all changes, till we come to the radical signification. So we are led to a proper knowledge of the language, as a clear conception of the common signification can, in general, be only discovered in the light of the radical meaning.

22. Easy as it may be, in most cases, to find the form of the root by decomposing the words, yet it is often difficult to ascertain the original signification. Where it remains perceptible to the senses, it is immediately discovered: thus, fließen to flow, from the moving on of the fluid; wehen to blow, from the soft movement of the air; blau blue, from a colour, &c. In other cases there are difficulties which can only be overcome by close investigation.

23. The doctrine of the interchange of consonants,* and that of umlaut† and guna‡ are the two gates which lead into the sanctuary of etymology. The former opens the insight into the true nature of the consonants, the latter into that of the vowels. He, then, who has a clear view of these two doctrines, has received the consecration, and can look into the interior of the sanctuary.§

§ It ought to be acknowledged again, that this is a very imperfect view, but the shortest and best that could be found. Those who would enter fully into the subject, must consult the original authorities quoted throughout this abstract, and especially Professor J. Grimm's invaluable Deutsche Grammatik, 8 vols. 8vo. ## XIV.—AN ACCOUNT OF THE WORK.

1. AFTER much consideration, the Roman character has been adopted in printing the A.-S. words, with the exception of the two peculiar letters þ and ð, an account of which will be found under þ in the Dictionary. With all the prejudices of an antiquarian taste, and an eye long familiar with the form in which the words had been accustomed to be read, and what has been called the Anglo-Saxon character, and with the difficulty of recognizing the same words when presented in a different dress, required a strong reason to justify the rejection of the old letters. Nothing but a thorough conviction that the Roman character would be the more legible, and would best show the identity of the present English with the Anglo-Saxon, as well as the clear analogy existing in the words with all the other Germanic languages, would have led to the adoption of this type. As a table is given for the sound of the letters in the chief languages used in the Dictionary, this opportunity is taken to introduce the peculiar characters of each language.* Words from the oriental tongues being written from right to left, and difficult to express by European letters alone, are given in their original characters; but for facility of comparison they are also represented in Roman letters.

2. It was originally intended to exclude all impure Anglo-Saxon words and to introduce none of a later date than A.D. 1100. Subsequently it was found desirable to take a wider range, and to include some terms of a more recent formation.† These are mostly from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, with their date affixed. As the authors are always quoted, the age and purity of a word can at once be seen. The radical and some other chief words are generally printed in capitals. Accents are now adopted, as they were evidently employed by the Anglo-Saxons, to distinguish long from short vowels: thus, ác an oak, ac but; ís ice; is; þé thee, þe the; fór went, for for, &c. They are only used in the Dictionary on the word and its variations standing at the head of an article, this being sufficient for all practical purposes.—That orthography is, for the most part, strictly followed which is found most frequently in the best authors: still the principal variations in the literal expression of a word are added in the order in which they vary from what is deemed the correct spelling. No fancy or presumption has been permitted in the orthography; but all authors have been allowed to answer for themselves and to appear in their own dress, without a wish to dictate the mode in which it is now presumed they ought to have written.

† As many words were omitted in the early part of the alphabet, the supplement is rendered much more extensive than would otherwise have been necessary.

A reference is constantly made to the place where the word is found, and the reader left to form his own judgment. Even verbs in -gian are inserted when they are discovered so written. Verbs with the prefixes be-, ge-, on-, &c., are frequently placed under the radical word; but if found in the infinitive mood, or in any form directly derived from the infinitive, such verbs are given, with a brief explanation, in the alphabetical order of the prefixes be-, ge-, &c., with a reference to the radical word for a full explanation. The majority of words have exactly the same sense with or without the prefixed ge-, as nyðerian, and genyðerian to humble, (Lk. xiv, 11: Ps. xvii, 29.)—No pains have been spared to ascertain and express the precise grammatical inflections. Every known irregularity in a word is placed in its alphabetical order, with its meaning: thus, eóde went, delivered, the perfect tense, is referred to the infinitive gan to go. If the meaning be all that is required, it is thus ascertained at once; but should the derivation and other particulars be desired, they may be found under the word to which a reference is made.

3. With the view of illustrating the Anglo-Saxon, nearly all the radical words, and a few important compounds, are followed by the parallel terms* from the cognate dialects. Synonymes without a meaning attached have the same signification as the A.-S. word under which they are brought. When it was difficult to ascertain whether the noun or verb was the radical, parallels are occasionally inserted under both. To show more clearly the analogy of cognate languages, an attempt has been made to arrange the parallel terms in the most natural order. The Low (Platt) German is generally placed first, because it is now spoken by the people who inhabit the territory formerly occupied by the Old-Saxons, the progenitors of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. The Dutch and Friesic words follow, because they are of the same Low-German branch, and most similar to the A.-S. and Platt. The German then succeeds with the Alemannic from Kero, Otfrid, &c. Francic, from a translation of Isidore De Nativitate, &c. and from Willeram's Canticum Canticorum: these are followed by the Mæso-Gothic. With this Teutonic or German branch is connected the Scandinavian, including the Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Icelandic, Old Danish or Norse. The Slavonic, Latin, Greek, and Celtic synonymes are not given unless they bear some striking affinity to the word under consideration. The following arrangement, beginning with the Low-German, and, as frequently as practicable, tracing the word through the cognate dialects, up to some oriental source,

* The author has here the pleasure of recording the exertions of a very learned and zealous friend, a native of Holstein, well acquainted with all the Teutonic and Scandinavian dialects. This erudite friend, who will not allow his name to appear, has used his utmost efforts to verify every word introduced amongst the parallels, and to give the orthography and gender correctly. The laborious work of Meidinger, entitled Etymologische Wörterbuch Frankfurt, am Main, 8vo. 1833, has been occasionally used. The Rev. G. Phillips, M.A. Fellow of Queens' Coll., Cambridge, has enriched the latter part of this Dictionary by his knowledge of the oriental languages, in selecting some parallel words from the Shemitic family.

4. The derivation immediately follows the synonymes. If the word be compounded in A.-S. it is occasionally traced to an oriental origin. From the danger of giving way to fancy, on the debateable ground of etymology, it has been an anxious wish and constant care rather to do too little than too much, and to avoid a dictatorial and dogmatical spirit on every point, but especially in the derivation of words. Immediately after compound terms will be found their constituent parts with their separate meanings: but such compounds as at once indicate their composition, are analysed; the literal sense of each part is then only given, in words which most resemble the A.-S., and for this purpose there has been no scruple in using some obsolete and modern provincial terms.

The synonymes and derivation were placed before the explanation, the radical meaning of the separate parts of a word being ascertained, would naturally lead to the first sense of the compound; thus sefest [æ law, fast, fixed] fixed in the law, religious, devout; religiosus. The explanation of the A.-S. is in English, one word of which is often identical with the Saxon; hence the necessity of a long paraphrastic Latin rendering is superseded, and the definition much shortened: but that this Dictionary may have the authority of Somner and Lye, and the sanction of the most important A.-S. authors, the principal significations are also given in Latin. The Latin explanation is generally the original from which the A.-S. translation was first made, and thus confirms the exact meaning on the authority of the translators, whose chief literature consisted in Anglo-Saxon versions from the Latin of Bede, Boethius, Orosius, and the Vulgate, or Latin Scriptures. In the quotations, except from the Vulgate, which is too well known to require it, an English translation is given, as literal as possible; but in those from Bede, and often from the Vulgate, the Latin is retained, as it is the original from which the Saxon translation was made, and therefore the best explanation. To the English explanation the Latin is appended, when it indicates the grammatical order and the inflections of the Saxon. The following is the general plan adopted in the explanation:—The radical meaning is placed first, then its various significations are numbered, and arranged in that order which appeared most accordant with the association of ideas;—each meaning, when practicable, is confirmed by quotations, with a reference to the authors by whom the word is used. Next follow the idiomatical expressions marked (¶). Selecting examples to confirm the different meanings, those have been preferred which illustrate the grammatical inflections. In the explanations and illustrations, brevity and perspicuity have always been kept in view. These means, and a proper attention to as much economy of space as is compatible with neatness in typographical execution, more practical illustration is comprised in this volume than in the two folios of Lye. In the English and Latin Indexes,* the Saxon to the greater part of

* In preparing the Indexes and carrying them through the press, the obliging attentions of Rev. J. Williamson, and Mr. O. H. Flowers, both of St. John's College, Cambridge, are not to be forgotten.

English and Latin terms may be found, the derivation and original meaning of most English words may be ascertained, and a comparison instituted with their radical cognates in the other Gothic languages.

6. Some words have been collected from old Glossaries, with a mere Latin meaning. In such cases, the only mode of discovering the real sense was by the derivation and analogy of cognate words of Teutonic origin. When this failed, there was no alternative but to translate the Latin signification into English: thus, geman the hollow of the hand, sole of the foot, could only be known by translating, vola, Cot. 198. Some words are from Somner, Benson, and Lye, for which no other authority could be found. The orthography, inflection, and meaning of these words are given, without alteration, on the responsibility of these authors.

7. As there has been a careful citation of authorities, and at the same time particular obligations expressed, very little more can be now required. A free use, without continued reference, has been made of preceding Dictionaries and Vocabularies, and of the A.-S. Grammar of an erudite friend, the late Professor Rask. Mr. Thorpe's Glossaries, appended to his Analecta Anglo-Saxonica, and Apollonius, and his index to Cædmon, have been useful auxiliaries. Citations from Cædmon have always been made from Mr. Thorpe's improved text, through whom, and the kindness of Sir Nicholas Carlisle, the learned secretary of the Society of Antiquaries, the perusal of some sheets was allowed before the work was published. Amongst those to whom the greatest debt of gratitude is due, is an old and faithful friend, C. S. Cardale, Esq., known to A.-S. students by the benefit he has rendered them in publishing his elegant and correct edition of Boethius. This gentleman allowed the full and free use of his extensive and very valuable Anglo-Saxon and English Dictionary in MS. It would be ingratitude not to mention the friendly communications of the Rev. S. Fox, or to leave unnoticed the advantages derived from his published works.* A well known collector of choice books, Mr. Bohn, was so obliging as spontaneously to lend an interleaved copy of Lye's Dictionary, with MS. notes by the late Rev. S. Henshall. The Rev. M. White, B.D. Professor of A.-S. in the University of Oxford, had given notice of his intention to prepare an A.-S. Dictionary, but being informed that this work was far advanced, Mr. White, in the most gentlemanly manner, gave up his intended publication. He has, however, taken the most lively interest in the progress of this Dictionary.

8. This work was begun with a sanguine hope of soon bringing it to a satisfactory conclusion; but it has employed every leisure hour of the compiler for more than seven years, four of which it has been in the

* The following neat and valuable publications of Mr. Fox deserve the especial notice of Anglo-Saxon students:—Menologium, or the Poetical Calendar of the Anglo-Saxons, 8vo. 1830. ness. It is at last brought to a close ; and, though he has used all the diligence, and availed himself of every means in his power, having the patriotism, amidst many disadvantages, to print in his own country at his own expense and risk, it is far, very far from answering even his own expectations. He can, however, honestly declare that his utmost exertions have been continually made to lay before the public, in this Dictionary, a brief but comprehensive summary of the Anglo-Saxon language. The sources of information are constantly pointed out ; hence, where there are errors, there also are the means of discovering truth. Though he has always endeavoured to guard against prejudice and predilection, he is conscious that opinions have sometimes been advanced which may appear to want support. In such, and indeed in all cases, as he has stated in another place, he invites liberal criticism, being assured that, by the collision of opposite opinions, new light, if not truth, is often elicited ; and should this be the case, he will have cause to rejoice, whether it be produced by himself or by a more successful investigator.

SEVENTEEN years have elapsed since a zealous, but very imperfect attempt was made to divest Anglo-Saxon Grammar of its Latin incumbrances, and offer one formed on the true genius and structure of the language in the publication of The Elements of the Anglo-Saxon Grammar with copious Examples, 8vo. 1823, pp. 330. Before committing this work to the press, every accessible source of information was explored, and a complete English Translation made of Angelsaksisk Sproglære ved R. K. Rask, Stockholm, 1817. In 1826, the most practical part of The Elements with such corrections and additions as naturally arose from a farther consideration of the subject, appeared with the title of A Compendious Grammar of the primitive English or Anglo-Saxon Language, 8vo. 1824.* The following Essentials are given as the result of a still longer and closer investigation of the language in the preparation of the Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, and a continued appeal to the grammar of a lamented friend, the late Professor Rask, and to the learned Deutsche Grammatik of Professor Grimm. It will be seen that, as information has increased, there has been a gradual approximation, in grammatical forms and accents, to the views of Professor Rask and Grimm. While there is a hope that the Essentials, referring only to Etymology, may be found the most simple and practical, a very short abstract is given of Professor Rask and Grimm's Grammars for the use of those who prefer, what may be considered the more complete systems of these celebrated men.

THE ESSENTIALS,

&c.

1. THE Anglo-Saxon letters are a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, (k), l, m, n, o, p, (q), r, s, t, u, v, x, y, þ, ð.*

2. The letters j, k, q, v, and x, are not found in genuine Anglo-Saxon; for k and q the Anglo-Saxons used c and cw. p, þ had the hard sound of th in thin, thing; and D, ð soft, as th in thine, smooth.

3. All nouns, having the nom. s. ending in -a, -scipe, -dóm, -end, and -ere, are masculine: those having the nom. s. in -nes, -um, -uð, -ð, and -estre, are feminine: and those in -ærn, -ed, are neuter. All nouns having the nom. and ac. pl. in -u are of the first declension, neuter gender. Every noun, having the nom. and ac. pl. in as, is masculine—All nouns making g. s. in -e are feminine.

4. If a noun be masculine and have the nom. s. in -e, it always makes the g. in -an; it is therefore of the second declension. All other masculine nouns make the g. s. in -es, and are hence of the first declension.—All neuter nouns make the g. s. in -es, and are of the first declension, except a very few in -e, which are of the second declension, and have the g. in -an.—All feminine nouns having the nom. s. in -e are of the second declension, and make the g. in -an; all other feminine nouns make the g. in -e, and are of the third declension.

6. The first declension, (except those in -u, see § 13) only comprehending m. and n. nouns, is known by the genitive case singular ending in -es. It includes almost all masculine nouns, not ending in -a or -u, such as those in -dóm, wisdóm, es; m. wisdom; -end (derived from participles) as Hælend, es; m. the healer, Saviour; -ere, fiscere, es; m. a fisher: -ela, récelas, es; m. incense: -ing, cyning, es; m. a king: -erd, -ord, -est, as hlaford, es; m. a lord: -að, -eð, -oð, as monað, es; m. a month: -scype, or -scipe, as freondscipe, es; m. friendship: and generally, nouns ending in -l, -m, -n, -r, as eorl, es; m. a nobleman: æðm, es; m. breath: also neuter nouns ending in a consonant, or in two or more consonants; as word, es; n. a word: neuters in -e and -inle; as rice, es; n. a kingdom: dissyllables in -el, -ol, -en, -er; as tungel, es; n. a star: nouns in -ed, -et, -od, heafod, es; n. a head.

* The following characters have been generally called Anglo-Saxon:—

g.	smitð-es	end-es	stæf-es	word-es	ric-es	fæt-es
d.	smitð-e	end-e	stæf-e	word-e	ric-e	fæt-e
pl. nom. ac.	smitð-as	end-as	stæf-as	word	ric-u	fat-u
g.	smitð-a	end-a	stæf-a	word-a	ric-a	fat-a
d.	smitð-um	end-um	stæf-um	word-um	ric-um	fat-um.

7. In this declension the nom. and ac. cases are always the same. Masculines ending in a consonant, like smitð a smith; and those in e like ende an end, are the most regular: nouns in -e are declined as if they had no e, like smitð, except in the nom. and ac. s. where it is preserved.—Monosyllables with æ before a single consonant, and before st, sc, assuming another syllable with a, o, or u, in declining, change æ into a, as in stæf a letter, stafas letters; fæt a vat, fatu vats; gæst a guest, gastas guests; but the æ is unchanged in stæfes of a letter, in fæte to a vat, or in cræft craft, cræftas crafts; because the syllables es, e, assumed in declining, do not contain a, o, or u, or because æ comes before other double consonants, than st, sc.—Dissyllables in -l, -n, -r, -d, are often contracted when a vowel follows, as tungel a star, g. tungles of a star, instead of tungeles; heafod a head, g. heáfdes of a head.—Neuters ending in a single or double consonant as word a word, make the nom. and ac. in the s. and pl. all alike; but dissyllable nouns of the neuter gender ending in -el, -ol, -en, -er, diminutives in -inle and neuters ending in -e, make the nom. and ac. pl. in -u, as tungel a star, tunglu stars, ricu kingdoms; neuter monosyllables having the diphthong æ make the pl. in -u, and also change the vowel, as fæt a rat, pl. nom. ac. fatu rats.*

8. The second declension has the genitive case singular ending in -an, as witega an; m. a prophet: wuce, an; f. a week: eære, an; n. an ear. All nouns having the nom. ending in -a are masculine, and of this declension; so also are all feminine nouns in -e, -estre, -istre, as sangistre, an; f. a songstress; and names of men and women in -a, as Attila, Anna, &c.

	m.	f.
s. nom.	witeg-a	wuc-e
g.	witeg-an	wuc-an
d.	witeg-an	wuc-an
ac.	witeg-an	wuc-an
pl. nom. ac.	witeg-an	wuc-an
g.	witeg-ena	wuc-ena
d.	witeg-um	wuc-um.

9. Very few neuters have been found of this declension, eære an ear, and eæge an eye, stace a stake, like all neuters, make the ac. s. like the nom., thus, nom. ac. eære. eæge; in the other cases they are declined exactly like wuce.

* See example in § 6.

10. Names of countries and places in -a, are sometimes indeclinable, and sometimes they take the Latin form. Európa has Európan, Európe, Európe (i. e. Europe) in Orosius.*

11. The third Declension, which only includes feminine nouns, is known by the genitive case singular ending in e. All feminine nouns ending in a consonant, or in -u, or -o; as wylen or wyln a female slave, gifu a gift, syn sin, are of this declension. Nouns in -ung, styrung, e; f. a motion, and a few in -ing; those in -nis, -nes, -nys, as gelicnes, se; f. a likeness, -uð, geoguð, e; f. youth are all feminine, and of this declension.

f.	f.	f.	f.

d. wyln-e	gif-e	syn-ne	gelicnes-se
ac. wyln-e	gif-e	syn-ne	gelicnes-se
pl. nom. ac. wyln-a	gif-a	syn-na	gelicnes-sa
g. wyln-a	gif-ena	syn-na	gelicnes-sa
d. wyln-um	gif-um	syn-num	gelicnes-sum.

12. Nouns ending in a consonant make the g. pl. in -a, as wylna of female slaves, synna of sins; those in -u or -o have the g. pl. in -ena, as gif-ena of gifts, and sometimes the ac. in u. Those which end in a single consonant, after a short vowel, double the final letter in the g. and all the other cases formed from it, as sin sin, synne of sin, gelicnes a likeness, gelicnesse of a likeness. Nouns in -ung sometimes make the d. s. in -a. A few words have the ac. like the nom. as tíd time, hand a hand, miht might.

Irregular Nouns.

13. The few masculine nouns which end in -u, such as, lagu water, medu mead, sidu custom, sunu a son, are thus declined: s. nom. ac. sunu a son; g. d. suna; pl. nom. ac. suna, g. suna, or sunena; d. sunum. In the pl. they are declined like nouns of the second declension.—A few names of nations are only used in the plural, and end in -e, as Romane the Romans, Angle the Angles, Dene the Danes. They are declined, nom ac. Romane, g. Romana, d. Romanum.

14. A few words ending in -or, and -er denoting relationship, such as bróðor a brother, dóhter a daughter, whether masculine or feminine, are thus declined s. nom. g. Bróðor; d. bréðer: pl. nom. g. ac. bróðra, d. bróðrum.

15. Some nouns chiefly monosyllables, containing the vowels a, u, ú, and ó, change those vowels in d. s. and nom. ac. pl. as man a man, in d. s. is men to or with a man, and pl. nom. ac. men men: also fót a foot, tóð a tooth, bóc a book, bróc breeches, gós a goose, turf a turf, burh a castle, cu a cow, lus a louse, mús a mouse, móðor a mother, dóhtor a daughter, make in the d. singular, and in the nom. and ac. pl. fét, téð, béc, bréc, gés, tyrf, byrh, and byrig, cy, lys, mys, méder, déhter. They are mostly regular without change of vowel in the g. s. as mannes, fótes, tóðes, bóce, bróce, góse, múse, turfe; and also in the g. and d. pl. as manna, mannum; fóta, fótum; tóða, tóðum, bóca, bócum; bróca, brócum; gósa, gósum; músa, músum; turfa, turfum; dóhtra, dóhtrum.†

Adjectives.

16. Anglo-Saxon adjectives have variable terminations to correspond with their nouns.

* Mr. Thorpe's translation of Rask, § 65.

† See Dr. Grimm's Deutsche Grammatik, vol. i. p. 646, 647.

29. Sylf self is declined like gód indefinitely and definitely, and is added to personal pronouns in the same gender and case, as ic sylf I myself, mín sylfes of myself, me sylfum to myself; but the d. of the personal pron. is sometimes as in Eng. prefixed to the nom. of sylf, me-sylf myself, þe-sylf thymself, him-sylf himself. Definitely it signifies the same, as, se sylfa man the same man. Sometimes agen own, declined like the indefinite of gód good, is added. To his agenum to his own, Jn. i. 11. The reciprocal sense of his, as his own is also expressed by sín.

Adjective Pronouns.

30. Adjective pronouns are only the genitive cases of the personal pronouns taken and declined as the indefinite adjective gód. They are mín my, þín thine, uncer our two, ure, or user our, incer your two, eower your.

32. The indeclinable article þe is used instead of the various cases of se, seo, þæt. Se, seo, þæt are used relatively like the English that for the relative hwá who, hwæt what.

Relative Pronouns.

33. The article or definitive se, seo, þæt, þe are generally used for the relative who, which. The interrogatives hwá who? hwæt what? are thus declined.

Numerals.

35. The numerals will be found in the Dictionary: A'n one is declined like gód good. twegen m. twa f. n. two, begen m. bá f. n. both, and þry three, are declined thus:

m.	f. n.	m.	f. n.

36. Feower four makes the g. feowera; fif five, six six, seofon seven, are also found the g. fifa, sixa, and seofona. When used absolutely, tyn ten makes in nom. ac. me, and d. tynum; also twelf, nom. twelfe; g. twelfa; d. twelfum, but they are ten undeclined. Twentig, and other words in -tig, are thus inflected in all genders, m. ac. -tig; g. -tigra; d. -tignum. The ordinal numbers are all declined definitely se góda, as se forma; seo, þæt forme the first, except oðer second, which has only the indefinite declension like gód good.

Verbs.

37. The conjugation of Anglo-Saxon verbs, like the English, is very simple.* According to the inflection, all Anglo-Saxon verbs may be divided into two classes, the one more simple and regular, the other more complex and irregular; hence, formerly called regular and irregular.

38. The most simple, regular, and prevailing mode of forming the perfect tense and perfect participle is by the addition of a syllable. Hence in Anglo-Saxon, as in modern English, this plan universally prevails when new verbs are formed, or when verbs from a foreign language are adopted; when verbs are formed from adjectives, nouns, or from the perfect tense of complex verbs with a modified meaning. This prevalence in forming the principal parts of such verbs requires that they should be placed in the first class, especially since it is the permanent and unalterable inflection of verbs; for, though there is an increased and continued verging of complex verbs to the simple mode of formation, yet the simple or more regular class of verbs is always stable, and never assume the complex form.

39. The simple and more regular class of verbs is distinguished by having the perfect tense of two or more syllables, and the termination in -ode, -ede, -de, or -te, while the perfect participle ends in -od, -ed, -d, or -t; as, luf-ian to love; p. luf-ode; pp. luf-od; segel-ian to sail; p. segel-ede, or segel-ode; pp. gesegel-ed, gesegel-od; bærn-an to burn; p. bærn-de; pp. bærn-ed; met-an to meet; p. met-te; pp. met, or gemet.

40. The more complex and irregular verbs are known by having the perfect tense monosyllable, ending in the last consonant coming before the infinitive -an, with a change of the vowel, and the perfect participle ending in -en, or -n; as, far-an to go; p. fór; pp. far-en; sing-an to sing; p. sang; pp. gesung-en.

What is generally termed the passive voice has no existence in A.-S. any more than in modern English. The Anglo-Saxons wrote, he is lufod he is loved. Here he is, is the ind. pres. of the neut. verb wesan, and lufod loved, is the pp. of the verb lufian to love. In parsing, every word should be considered a distinct part of speech: "to a king," is not called a dative in English, as regi in Latin, because the English phrase is not formed by inflection, but by the auxiliary words "to a." If auxiliaries do not form cases in English nouns, why should they be allowed to form various tenses, and a passive voice either in the English, or in its parent the Saxon? Thus, Ic mæg beon lufod I may be loved, instead of being called the potential mood, pass. mæg is more rationally considered a verb in the indic. mood, indef. tense, sing. beon, the neut. verb in the infia. mood, after the verb mæg: lufod is the perf. part. of the verb lufian.

41. There are four moods—the indicative, imperative, subjunctive, and infinitive, with a sort of second infinitive, and two participles. The infinitive does not admit of a preposition before it, but the second infinitive is always preceded by tô, as tô etanne to eat; it seems to be the dative case of the infin. etan to eat, which is a sort of a noun. With the neuter verb it has a passive signification, or seems to denote a duty. Hit is tô witanne it is to be known, it must or ought to be known, Elf. Pref. Gen.

42. There are two tenses—the indefinite and perfect. The indefinite* tense may refer either to the present period or to a future, and thus comprehend what are generally termed the present and future tenses. Ic write I write now, or I write to-morrow.

43. The conjugation of a regular verb, or a verb of the simple class, § 39.

* Also heo she, hit it : <sup>a</sup> bærn-e and lufge are used when the pronoun follows the verb, as in asking a question, or commanding : but when the pronoun is omitted, or it precedes the verb -að is used : <sup>c</sup> also, -edon : <sup>d</sup> also, -an.

* The future form is the same as the present, for example : "Hi doð eow of gesomnungum, ac seo tid cymð þæt ælc þe eow ofslyhð, wenð þæt he þenige Gode they shall put you from the synagogue : and the time shall come that every one who slayeth you, will think that he serveth God." St. John xvi. 2.

The words lc wille, seal, &c. generally signify volition, obligation, and injunction, rather than the property of time. Sometimes, however, they have some appearance of denoting time.

Remarks on the formation of Moods, Tenses, and Persons.

44. The imperative mood is formed from the infinitive by rejecting the infinitive termination -an, as, bærn-an to burn, bærn burn. If the consonant be double, after the rejection of the infin. an, one consonant is rejected, and e added; as, syll-an to give, sell; imper. syle give, sell. Verbs in -ian, make the imper. in -a, as luf-ian to love, luf-a love.

45. The p. tense is formed by changing the infinitive -an, or -ian, into -ode, -ede, or -de; and the pp. by changing -an, or -ian, into -od, or -ed: as luf-ian to love; p. luf-ode; pp. luf-od: segl-ian to sail; p. segl-ede; pp. segl-ed.

46. Verbs having the consonants d, f, g, l, m, n, r, s, w, and ð, before the infinitive termination, often contract the p. tense, and have only -de added instead of -ede or -ode; as, betyn-an to shut, betyn-de I shut or have shut; alys-an to redeem, alys-de I redeemed.

47. Verbs which end in -dan or -tan with a consonant preceding, do not take an additional d or t in the past tense; as, send-an to send, send-e I sent; ahred-dan to liberate, ahred-de I liberated; pliht-an to plight or pledge; pliht-e I plighted or pledged; set-tan to set, set-te I set. Those with c or cc change the c or cc into h before t; as, rec-can to regard; p. reh-te regarded.

48. When verbs have the letters t, p, c, h, z, and s, after another consonant before the infinitive -an, they often not only reject the vowel before d in the p. and pp., but change d into t; as from dypp-an to dip, would be regularly formed dypp-ede, dypp-ed dipped, but they are contracted into dypde, dypde, dypde, dyppt, and dyppt dipped.

49. Formation of persons. The first person singular is formed from the infinitive by changing -an, &c. into -e, and the second into -st, -ast, or -est, and the third into -ð, -að, -eð.

50. In the third person singular, the aspirate ð is changed into the soft t, when the infinitive ends in -dan, or -san; as, fed-an to feed, fet he feedeth or will feed; ræs-an to rush, ræst he rusheth: verbs in -þan or -tan receive no additional ð; as, cyð-an to tell, he cyð he makes known; hat-an to name, to call, hæst he calls. Verbs in -dan have the 2nd s. in -tst; as, send-an to send, þu sentst thou sendest,—yet sendest is sometimes found.

51. When the infinitive ends in -an with a vowel before it, the plural persons end in -iað; as, hingr-ian to hunger, hingr-iað we, ye, they hunger; wyr-ian to curse, wyr-iað we, ye, they curse; but if a consonant go before -an, then they end in -að; as, þyrst-an to thirst, þyrstað we, ye, they thirst.

52. The plural persons often end in the same manner as the first person singular, especially when the Saxon pronoun is placed after the verb: as, hwæt ete we what shall we eat? (See note b to § 43.)

53. If there be a double consonant in the verb, one is always rejected in forming the persons when another follows: as, spillan to spill, spilst spillest, spillð spilleth, spilde spilled. Where it would be too harsh to add st and ð to the bare root, an e is inserted, but only in the indefinite tense; as, nemn-an to name, nemn-est namest, nemn-eð nameth: the perfect is regularly formed, nem-de named; and so is the perfect participle, nemn-ed named.

54. On all occasions when e follows i, a g is inserted between them; hence, lufie I love, becomes lufge I love; and lufiende loving, becomes lufigende loving; g is also often found before an a or ea; as, sceawigan or sceawigean to shew, which are the same as sceawian to shew.

55. Complex verbs. Those verbs which become monosyllables after casting away the infinitive termination, are called complex, because the perf. tense is formed by various or complex modifications or changes of the radical vowel. Though there are only about 188 complex radical verbs, they are divided into many classes, and can hardly be known without giving a complete list. It is not deemed necessary to give them here, as they are all inserted in the Dictionary. For Englishmen, such a list is not absolutely required, as almost all the A.-S. verbs which have been usually called irregular form their p. and pp. as in English, thus ete, æt, eten eat, ate, eaten; gifan, geaf, gifen give, gave, given; writan, wrát, writen write, wrote, written. The following rules will, however, be useful in forming the p. and pp. of these verbs.

56. Verbs which become monosyllables after casting away the infinitive termination when the remaining vowel is a, often change it into o, and occasionally into eo; and ea generally into eo, in the past tense, while the vowel in the pp. remains unchanged; as infin. stand-an to stand, p. stód stood; pp. gestanden stood; infin. beát-an to beat; p. beot beat; pp. beáten beaten.

57. Verbs which have e or eo before the letters ll, lf, lg, lt, rp, rf, rg, and the like, have ea—and in a few cases æ—in the past tense, and o in the pp., as delft-an to dig; p. dealf dug; pp. dolfen dug.

58. Verbs which have i before the double consonants rn, nn, ng, nc, nd, mb, mp, &c. often change the i into a in the past tense, and into u in the pp.; as, sing-an to sing; p. sang sang; pp. sungen sung. Those which have i before a single consonant also changed the i into a in the perfect tense; the pp. is like the infinitive, or in u; as, bít-an to bite; p. bát bit; pp. biten bitten; nim-an to take; p. nam took; pp. numen taken.

59. Verbs, with ú or éó in the infinitive, have the p. in eá and the pp. in o; as, clúf-an to cleave; p. cleáf clove; pp. clufen; creóp-an to creep; p. creáp crept; pp. cropen crept.

60. Formation of persons in complex verbs. The personal terminations are most commonly like those in the simple or more regular verbs; the first vowel in the verb, however, is often changed in the second and third persons of the singular in the indefinite tense; but the plural persons retain the vowel of the first person singular: thus a is generally changed to æ, and sometimes to e or y;—c, ea, and u often become y, and sometimes i:—ó is converted into é:—ú or éó becomes y. The other vowels i and y are not changed. From bac-an to bake, we have Ic bace I bake, þu bæcst thou bakest, he bæcð he baketh: pl. we, ge, hi bacað we, ye, they bake. From stand-an to stand, we also sometimes find Ic stande I stand, þu stenst thou standest, he stent he standeth; pl. we, ge, hi standað we, ye, they stand. From et-an to eat, we have Ic ete I eat, þu yist thou eatest, he yt he eateth: we, ge, hi etað we, ye, they eat. From sceót-an to shoot, are formed Ic sceóte I shoot, þu scytst thou shootest, he scyt he shooteth; pl. we, ge, hi sceotað we, ye, they shoot.

61. The same observations which were made on the formation of the third person of simple verbs ending in -dan, -san, -tan, &c. (see § 50), will be applicable here: as, Ic ride I ride, he rit or rideð he rides; Ic cweðe I say, þu cwyst thou sayest, he cwyð he saith; Ic ceose I choose, þu cyst thou choosest, he cyst he chooses; and in et-an to eat, as in § 60.

62. The persons in the perfect tense are often formed like regular verbs; but the second person singular more frequently ends in e: as, from bacan to bake, we have the past tense boc, boce; thus p. s. Ic boc I baked, þu boce thou bakedst, he, &c. boc he, &c. baked; pl. we, ge, hi bocon we, ye, they baked.

63. Verbs which have u or o for the first vowel in the perfect participle, mostly have u in the second person singular, and all the plural persons of the p. tense; as in simple verbs, the third person singular is like the first: thus p. s. Ic sang I sang, þu sunge thou sangest, he or heo sang he or she sung; pl. we, ge, hi sungon we, ye, they sang.

64. Verbs, having a for the first vowel of the p. and i for the pp. make the second person s. and all the persons in the pl. of the p. in i; as, arisan to arise; p. ic, he, as I, he arose, þu arise thou arosest; we, ge, hi arison we, ye, they arose.—writan to write, p. ic, he wrát I, he wrote; þu write thou wrotest; we, ge, hi writon we, ye, they wrote.

65. Verbs of one syllable, terminating in a vowel, have an h annexed to them; and those in g. generally change the g into h in all parts of the verb, as well as in the imperative mood; as þwean to wash; imp. þweah wash; p. þwoh washed. Stigan rise; p. stah rose.

General Remarks upon the Gender and Declension

EVERY noun, which has the nom. s. in -a is m. and makes the g. s. in -an. All m. nouns ending in a consonant, or -e, make the g. s. in -es: those nouns which terminate in -dóm, -end, -ere, -ing, -erd, -ord, -scipe; -feld a field, plain; -ford a ford; -hám a home; -blew a place; -sted a place; -tun an inclosure, a town, &c.; likewise all nouns, making the nom. s. in -a, are all m. and, therefore, make the g. s. in -es.

All f. nouns, which have the nom. s. in -e, make the g. s. in -an. Every f. noun, ending in a consonant, such as words in -ceaster a city; -dun a hill; -scir, -scyr, a shire; -stow a place, &c. has the g. s. in -e: indeed, every noun having the g. s. in -e is f.

All nouns, having the nom. and ac. pl. in -u, are n., and, like all n. nouns, ending in a consonant, make the g. s. in -es.

Observations upon inflections, useful for finding words in the Dictionary.

In nouns, when a comes before a single consonant, or st. sc. followed by a, e, o, or u, and adjectives, when a comes before a single consonant followed by a, e, o, or u, the nom. s. is found by rejecting all the letters after the second consonant, or st. sc. and by changing e into a: in the nouns fatum with vats, stafas letters, gastas guests, by casting away um, as, as, changing a into e, we have fæt a vot, stæf a letter; gæst a guest, and in the adjectives, lata of late, latum to late, se smala the small, smalost smallest, se smalesta the smallest, taking away es, ena, um, a, ost, esta, and changing e into a, we have læt late, and smæl small.

Synopsis of the terminations of verbs.

Simple verbs, or verbs which have the p. of two or more syllables.

Complex verbs, or verbs which have the p. a monosyllable.

1.* By substituting the inf. -an, for -e, -st, -de, &c., and prefixing the radical part of the verb, as bærn-e, bærn-st, bærn-de, we have the inf. bærn-an to burn. <sup>a</sup> -st is changed into -dan in the inf. as þu lætst thou leadest, becomes lædan to lead. <sup>b</sup> -t is changed into -tan as he gret he greets, becomes gretan to greet: <sup>c</sup> -ð, after a vowel, is -ðan, as he cyð he tells, cyðan to tell. <sup>d</sup> -hte is the inf. -htan, or -ccan, as p. he plibte he plighted, inf. plibtan; he reht he cared for, inf. reccan. In the p. and pp. -eal-, before -de, or -d, is the inf. -ellan, as te geteald told, inf. tellan to tell: -eah- before -te, -t is inf. -eccan, as þeahthe thatched, inf. eccean to thatch.

2.* By substituting -ian for -ige, -ast, -ode, &c. as luf-ige, luf-ode, we have luf-ian to love.

3.* By substituting -an for -e, -st, -est, &c., and changing the vowels of the first syllable in the following directions, the inf. is found. <sup>a</sup> In the 1st and 2nd persons indf. a, e are generally from a of the inf. as þu bæcst thou bakest, he bæcð he bakes, inf. bacan to bake: þu stendst thou standest, he stent he stands, inf. standan to stand: y is from e, eo, or u, as þu ytst thou eatest, yt he eats, inf. etan to eat: þu cyst thou choosest, he cyst he chooses, inf. ceosan to choose: he sycð he sucks, inf. súcan to suck. <sup>b</sup> The 1st and 3rd persons end in the last consonant of the verb, and change the preceding vowel: thus, e and sometimes eo in the p. are from inf. a; but eo in the p. is generally from ea: as p. he stód he stood, from inf. standan to stand; p. he bleow he blew, inf. blawan to blow; he beot he beat, inf. beatan to beat. The p. ea, e, the pp. e before ll, ff, gg, tt, rr, ff, gg, &c. are from the inf. e, eo, or u: as, p. he mealt he melted, pp. molten melted, from inf. meltan to melt; he stærf he died, pp. storfen died, steorfan to die; p. cleáf he cleave, pp. clafen cloven, inf. clúfan to cleave. The a of the p. and pp. are from i of the inf. p. he sang he sang; pp. sungen sung; inf. sungan to sing. p. he bat he bit, pp. biten bitten, inf. bitan to bite.

ABB

A and O interchange, particularly before a, in a short syllable, as mon, man a man; long, lang long; sond, sand sand; an, on on; etc.

<sup>b</sup>A prefixed to words, sometimes denotes a negative, deteriorating, or opposite signification, as from, out, away; thus, awendan to turn from, to subvert, from wendan to turn; atynan to open, expose, from tyndan to enclose, hedge; agylde, or ægilde without payment, without amends; amod or æmod out of, or without mind, mad; adon to do away, to banish, composed of a from, don to do: for æ v. 2 i.

<sup>c</sup>A, prefixed, does not always appear to alter the signification; in this case, it is generally omitted in modern English words derived immediately from Saxon; thus, arisan to rise; aberan to bear; abrecan to break; abiton to bite. The prefixed a, however, generally adds some little force, or intensity, to the original signification of the word to which it is joined.

<sup>d</sup>A, be, for, ge, and to, are often indifferently and interchangeably prefixed to verbs, especially to perfect tenses and to perfect participles, as well as to verbal nouns. If a word, therefore, cannot be found under a, it may be sought for under be, for, ge, or to, or rather under the first letter that remains, after rejecting these prefixes.

<sup>e</sup>A, added to words, denotes a person, an agent, or actor, and occasionally it denotes inanimate things; as cum come thou, cuma a person who comes, or a guest; swic deceive thou, se swica the traitor; worht wrought, wyrhta a workman, a wright; foregeng foregoing, foregenga a foregoer; bead or gebed a supplication, a praying, beada a person who supplicates or prays; bytl a beetle, or hammer, bytla a hammerer, a builder; cræft art, cræfta an artist, artificer; geman to assemble, gemana an assembly, a congregation; gewuna a custom, habit.

<sup>f</sup>A', aa; adv. [Fr. æ: Moes. aiw: Grk. det. The original signification seems to be flowing, referring to time, which every moment flows on, to water, etc. v. ea a river] Always, ever, for ever; hence the Old English AYE, ever; semper.—Ac a sceal þæt wiðerwearde gemetgian but ever must the contrary moderate, Bt. 21. Aa, oð weorulde ende awoys, until the end of the world, Bd. 4, 19. ¶ A world forever, Ex. 21, 6. A forð ever forth, from thence, *Bt. BÆH

The sound of B is produced by the lips; hence it is called a labial consonant. In all languages, and especially in the dialects of cognate languages, the letters employing the same organs of utterance are continually interchanged. In Anglo-Saxon, therefore, we find that B interchanges with the other labials F, P, and V, and with U: Ic bæbbe I have, he hæfð he hath. When words are transferred into modern English, B is sometimes represented by V; as Beber, or befor a beaver; lǣg, or lueg toy; Ober, ofer, over over; Eboistan, efoistan to blaspheme; Fot, uot a foot; Ebul evil; b or bb is sometimes omitted or superseded by f, p, u or v; as Ic lybbe I live, lif life; Diobul for deofl a devil.

* Be, bi, big; prep. dat. [Moss. bi: Swed. bi, be: Al. bei: Fr. Dut. Icel. by: Ger. bey. The prepositions be, bi, big are perhaps the imperative mood of big-an, bi-an, by-an to inhabit, occupy, possess, or from by or bye, a place occupied, or an habitation, all which denote nearness to one; in this case the primary signification would be proximity, nearness]

1. By, near to, to, at, in, upon, about, with; juxta, prope, ad, secus, in. 2. Of, from, about, touching, concerning; de. 3. For, because of, after, according to; pro, propter, secundum. 4. Beside, out of; o, ex:—1. Be wege by the way, Mk. 8, 3. Be þam strande upon the strand or shore, Mt. 13, 48. Ne be hlaf anum, ac be elcon worde, Mt. 4, 4. 2. Be þam cilde

Be- [Ger. be] is often used as a prefix. When prefixed to verbs, be- frequently expresses an active signification, as behabban to surround; began-gan to perform or dispatch, &c. Sometimes be- prefixed indicates no perceptible variation in the sense; as belifan to be remaining, or over and above, begyrdan to begird or gird, as in sprengan and besprengan to sprinkle, or besprinkle. The same observation will apply to the prefixes a-, for-, ge-, to-, &c. Some words are not now found in their simple state, but only occur with these prefixes; as belifan, gelic, arisan, &c. This preposition is used, with little variety, by all Gothic nations, as A. S. by-an, big-an, byg-an, beg-an: Moss. bau-an: Swed. do, bo-a, bu-a: Icel. by-a, bigg-a: Al. big-en, bu-en: Ger. bau-en: Dut. bouw-en, denoting to prepare, to build, to inhabit, to occupy, or possess, to exercise, to practice, to perambulate, to place, to manure, to till, to observe, to worship, to clothe, to repair; *Jansson's Herm. # D

D and t are often interchanged, as mette met, for mettde.

A word terminating with ed, d (Icel. at; t: Ger. et, t) indicates that a person or thing is furnished or provided with that which is expressed by the root, and is usually considered as a participle, although no verb may exist to which it can be assigned; such words have, therefore, generally ge prefixed to them; as gehyrne horned; ge-seod abad, Rask's Gr. by Mr. Thorpe, §. 326.

The proper termination of the perfect participle is ed, but it is often found in ad, od, ud and yd. When the letters t, p, c, h, x and s, after another consonant, go before the infinitive an, the vowel before the terminating d is not only rejected, but d is changed into t; as from dyp-pan to dip would be regularly formed dyppt dipped, contracted into dyppt, dyppt, and dyppt dipped.

G

* When g is the last radical letter of an Anglo-Saxon word, and follows a vowel or an r, it is often changed into h, as burh, for burg a town; g. burge; stāh (he) ascended, from stigan to ascend.—G is always inserted between the vowels -ie, making -ige, -igende, etc. the first sing. indef. and part. of verbs in, -ian. Thus, from lufian to love, blestian to bless, &c., are formed ic lufige I love, ic blestige I bless, lufigende loving, blestigende blessing. In English words, directly formed from the Anglo-Saxon, g is often changed, in the beginning and end, into y; and, in the middle, into i: as, gear a year; gealew yellow; gildan to yield; ganian to yawn; dæg a day; cæg a key; sæg a sail; stæger a stair, step; tægl a tail, &c.

Ge- [*Dut. It often changes the signification from literal to figurative; as, healdan to hold; gehealdan to observe, preserve; fyllan to fill; gefyllan to fulfil; biddan to bid, require; gebiddan to pray.

GUD [Upr, ndr rage, the fury in battle, the highest god, Odin: Icel. gudur, guwr battle, bel-lona: Icel. Gud God: Moes. Guth, Goth God; ytas, gytas ravenous warriors, the Jutes: O'dr violent, furiosus: Icel.

Odin the most fierce in battle, the highest god of the Scandinavians, because he was the first and most heroic of their leaders in war. Woden the god of war, adored by the German nations; in other dialects godan. Gotnar warlike, valiant men: Icel. Gautr the highest god, Odin. The name of the Goths implies brave warriors. The name of God is justly also derived from good; but not after the usual mode of thinking, because he is kind and beneficent; but, because he is furious and destructive. It is a common error of etymologists to attribute to the savages, who composed our words, the ideas of a civilized age. Good and a-yað-or are the same word. The first notion of ayaðos is that of being quick and vigorous. Ayaðos ayðpis are Goths, and gotnar stout men. A coward was called kakos. Apistos comes from apis, virtus from vis. When bravery in battle was the first of virtues, and cowardice the meanest of vices, evil and good were indicated by words implying these notions. The intrepid man alone was deemed worthy to be obeyed as judge or commander, and adored as God. The Persians give a further proof of my assertion, for

HUND, es; n. [*Plat. Ger. hundert: Dut. honderd: Frs.
huwndert, hondert: Tat. hund:
Moes. hund, hunda: Dan. hundred: Swed. hundra, hundrade: Icel. hundrad: in the poem upon Saint Anno, hunterit: in older dialects the latter part of this word is not found; for instance, in the Salic laws, chunna: the Moes. and A.-S. hund: Welsh, and Celt. Bret. cant: Albanish, kinnt, to which corresponds* the Lat. centum, derived by some from the Grk. κενταυ, to prick; it being a practice, in earlier times, to make a dot after each hundred. The terminating syllables ert, red or ret, which took their origin by transposition of red, rath, signified, according to Wach- ter, a number; but, according to Ihre, more justly, a stroke; it being the ancient custom to count or number by strokes or lines. The Plat. ret signifies a rent or line, which the ancients made on the wooden staff or stick, used to cast up their accounts. For this reason, the syllables red, ert, rad, have been added in the Swed.

and other northern languages to the tens instead of the Ger.
zig, as the Swed. attraed, Ger.
achtzig, eighty: niraed, Ger.
neunzig ninety. In ancient times hund only signified ten:
Moes. taihun-taihund: A.-S. hund-teontig designates ten times ten. In the A.-S. hundseofontig is seventy. In old
Ger. MSS. they use, instead of hundret, zehenzig: Isd. ze- hanzo. Fragment on Charle- magne, zehenzig. For two hundred, Wil. uses zui renze- henzog, and Ot. zuirozehan- zug; and for a thousand years
zenstunt zenzech iuro] A HUNDRED; centum. The A.-S.
prefixed hund to numerals, from seventy to a hundred and twenty, but it was sometimes omitted, when hund preceded;
as, scypa an hund and eahtatig of ships one hundred and eighty. When units are combined with tens, the units, as in Dut. and Ger., are placed first with and; as, an and twentig twenty-one; but in A.-
S. after the word hund or hundred, the smaller number is last, and the substantive repeated; for if the smaller number were set first, it would denote a multiplication; as, an hund wintra and þrittig wintra a hundred and thirty years; hund teontig wintra and seofon and XL wintra a hundred and forty-seven years;
feower hund wintra and þrit-tig wintra four hundred and thirty years; þreo hund manna and eahtatyne men three hundred and eighteen men. Instead of twa hund, we find also tu hund. The others are simply thus; þreo hund, fif hund, &c.

*Mancos, manca, mancus, mancuse. A mancus very often occurs in charters. Mann. says, "the mancus was about 11. 6d. of our present currency, Will of King Alf. p. 20, note f." But, by the quotation below, it appears that a mancus was thirty pennies, five of which made a shilling; hence a mancus was six shillings. Mr. Turner says, "whether the mancus was, like the pound, merely a weight, and not a coin, and was applied to express, in the same manner as the word pound, a certain quantity of money, coined or uncoined, I cannot decide; but I incline to think that it was not a coin. Indeed, there is one passage which shows that it was a weight, 'duas bradiolas aureas fabricatas quas pensarent XLV mancusas,' Heming. Chart. p. 86. I consider the two sorts of pennies [v. peneg] as the only coins of the Anglo-Saxons above their copper coinage; and am induced to regard all their other denominations of money as weighed or settled quantities of uncoined metal, Hist. A.-S. vol. ii. Ap. 2. p. 471; summula nummi apud Anglo-Saxones, tam argentei quam aurei, aliter mearc et marc dicta:—Libra on Leden is pund on Englisc fif penegas gemacigað ænne scyllinge and þrittig penega ænne manc libra in Latin is pound in English five pennies make a shilling, and thirty pennies one mancus, Elf. gr.
